by Josh Putterman
Staff Reporter

President E.A. Trabant said Friday that he wants to move back into the President's House at 47 Kent Way as soon as possible.

Trabant, who returned to the post of president after the Oct. 24 resignation of former President Russel C. Jones, currently resides in Wilmington and said it is both necessary and important for him to live on campus.

"It would certainly help the university if the current president had a residence in Newark," Trabant said Friday.

Andrew Kirkpatrick, chairman-elect of the board of trustees, said that Jones, who still lives in the President's House, will remain there until he finds a new place to live.

"It is inconvenient not having a residence for the president available," Trabant said.

Jones did not return phone calls made by The Review.

Both Trabant and Kirkpatrick said they are unsure how long it will take Jones to find a new home and move out of the house.

"Dr. Jones is making arrangements to move elsewhere, and currently, it is a question of when his new house will be available," Kirkpatrick said.

"Probably the only one who knows [when

Police file first charges in KA investigation

by June Horsey

Police arrested a Kappa Alpha member Thursday night and charged him with serving alcohol to minors and maintaining a disorderly premise on Oct. 22, the night a sexual assault allegedly occurred at the fraternity house.

Four other arrests remain in connection with the incident, according to Newark Police Cpl. Ron Anderson.

"We are going to try to arrest all those involved with indecent exposure and the sexual assault early next week," he said.

Anderson emphasized that the member arrested, Kristopher Korteweg, 21, was arrested separately from those involved with other crimes because, "I don't want anyone to get him confused with those involved with the sexual assault."

He said the three minors known to have been drinking at the fraternity house on Oct. 22 were invited by Korteweg's girlfriend.

"Two of the three women were victims of sexual assault later that evening," Anderson said.

One of the assaults allegedly occurred at the fraternity house, and one in the vicinity of South College Avenue and West Park Place, he explained.

"We do not believe that [the South College Avenue attack] involved a member of KA," he

Cohen's car found in L.A.; vehicle later taken from lot

by Ted Spiker
City News Editor

The car believed to be driven by Charles M. Cohen, the university student charged with two counts of first-degree murder, was located in California by Los Angeles Police last week.

New Castle County Police said the car was towed from a Los Angeles street, and a young male took the car when it was in a local tow yard.

Los Angeles Police recorded the vehicle's registration number as part of normal towing procedure, and New Castle County Police said the car was positively identified as the one believed to be driven by Cohen.

Cohen, 23, and the car have been missing since his parents, Dr. Martin and Ethel Cohen, were found stabbed to death in their Hockessin home Nov. 14.

The 1983 black Ford LTD, which had a stolen California license plate, was parked in a no-parking zone on a street that was being cleared for a parade, police explained.

As part of normal procedure to clear the parade route, Los Angeles Police towed the car.

At the impoundment lot, a young, white male asked the attendant if he could get personal

News Look: The world in brief

Smack comes back

The drug heroin is making a comeback as drug smugglers once again flood the American drug market, the Philadelphia Inquirer reported Sunday.

One U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency special agent said, "It's on the increase and so is the purity. On the East Coast, the purity is as high as it's ever been."

The agent said heroin can be found in all parts of Philadelphia, although cocaine is still the most used drug in Philadelphia and the rest of the country.

Federal drug officials said most of the heroin in Philadelphia and New Jersey comes from the New York drug market, where it is imported from China and Latin America.

The Chinese form of the drug is so pure it can be snorted, which lessens the fear of AIDS contamination through needles, according to officials.

Additionally, the Chinese are offering a purer form of heroin to regain buyers who were lost to crack.

Operators of tax shelter convicted

Three men from Long Island, N.Y. were convicted Saturday of running the largest illegal tax shelter in U.S. history, the Philadelphia Inquirer reported.

The fraudulent shelter attracted about $30 million from about 4,000 investors nationwide and cheated the government of $65 million in tax revenue.

After five weeks of testimony from 31 prosecution witnesses, the jury returned the verdict of guilty after deliberating for 3.5 days.

The men were convicted of 55 counts of filing false tax returns, five counts of unlawful interstate transportation of money taken by fraud and four counts of mail fraud.

U.S.-Israel 'accord' for counterterrorist actions uncovered

An Israeli official who was killed in a plane crash Wednesday said in June that a secret set of agreements between Israel and the United States authorized counterterrorist actions that he directed with former Lt. Col. Oliver L. North as early as 1985, the Philadelphia Inquirer reported.

The agreements were called "accords" or "terms of reference" by some sources. Though the agreements were confirmed by American and Israeli sources, they were never disclosed to Congress.

References were made to the operations of North and Amiram Nir, the late Israeli official, during the Congressional Iran-Contra investigation.

North faces charges of conspiracy to direct government money to unauthorized activities based on his use of Iran arms sales proceeds. Nir's assertion was the first indication that he and North acted under top-level governmental authorization.

Security tightened in Soviet republics

Security at Soviet airports and power plants in the republics of Azerbaijan and Armenia was increased by Kremlin officials on Saturday, the News Journal reported.

The Soviets also rushed to the aid of about 150,000 refugees who have fled from ethnic violence in those republics.

The Communist Party and government leaders from the two rival territories have been criticized by Moscow officials for failing to stop the rioting that has claimed the lives of at least 28 people there.

Soviet leaders have demanded that local officials form a special commission to lessen tension. They have assigned several members of the Politburo to aid them.

Argentine president orders end of revolt

Argentinian President Raul Alfonsin ordered the nation's army Saturday to end a three-day revolt by rebel troops, the News Journal reported.

Thousands of citizens rushed into the streets of the capital city of Buenos Aires to call for democracy.

Government troops allowed hundreds of heavily-armed rebel soldiers to move to another military base from an infantry school they had seized earlier.

Afterwards, in a televised statement, Alfonsin told the nation he had ordered the army to "suffocate" the rebellion.

Heavy troop movements were later reported by Argentinian news agencies. The movements were interpreted as preparations by loyalist forces to quell the rebellion.

Student electrocuted at train station

Freshman remains in critical condition after accident

by Ralph Baird
Staff Reporter

University freshman James E. Schiller, 18, was severely injured after touching a high-voltage wire at the South College Avenue Amtrak Train Station shortly before 11 p.m. Saturday, Newark Police said.

Schiller (AS 92), of Oceangate, N.J., and two other students were walking on top of a railroad car when a charge from the wire knocked Schiller unconscious and caused him to fall 20 feet to the ground, Cpl. Ron Anderson said.

Schiller's friends, Donald Smith, 18, and Gregory Bates, 18, called police to the site.

A team of paramedics treated Schiller and transported him to the emergency room at Christiana Hospital, where a spokeswoman said he was listed in critical condition early Monday morning.

Smith and Bates have been charged with trespassing, Anderson said, but court dates have not yet been set.

Schiller's left hand and right foot were severely burned when he touched the wire located above the boxcar.

The electricity apparently ran through his body and out through his foot, Anderson explained.

"There is no evidence of alcohol abuse," he added.

Hospital officials could not release any further details regarding Schiller's condition.

Anderson said he could not explain why the three students, all residents of Rodney dormitory, were at the train station.

Though the incident appears to have been an accident, Anderson warned other students and residents to avoid trespassing at the station, located in the 500 block of S. College Ave.

"We don't ever want it to happen again," Anderson said.

Miles named cultural director

by Melissa Price
Staff Reporter

University President E.A. Trabant has appointed Jack Miles as executive director of the Commission to Promote Racial and Cultural Diversity, effective Dec. 12.

Miles, a Wilmington resident who currently works for Delmarva Power & Light Co. as a customer service supervisor, will work to increase understanding between people with varied backgrounds, he said Sunday.

He said his first concerns as executive director of the commission will be to acquaint himself with members of the organization and with Trabant.

As executive director, Miles said he will cooperate with administrators heading the university's affirmative action program.

In addition, he will develop activities to promote interracial and cross-cultural understanding on campus, he added.

Black organizations gather in the Bacchus Room to celebrate Kwanzaa. The Afro-American holiday is normally celebrated between Dec. 26 and Jan. 1.

Music, rap, comedy, and drama filled the Bacchus Room of the Student Center Friday night as the celebration of the black holiday Kwanzaa came to an end.

The program, "A Sharing of Talent: Past, Present, and Future," sponsored by the Kwanzaa/Christmas Committee and the Black Faculty/Staff Coalition, was the last event in the week-long celebration of the holiday.

"It was an extreme success," said Theresa D. Sims (EG 90), chairwoman of the Kwanzaa/Christmas Committee, in reference to the first ever celebration of the holiday at the university.

"As a country, we haven't handled the challenge of diversity very well, so it's a challenge for the nation, as well as the uni-

The Kwanzaa holiday has African roots and is meant to honor the first fruits of harvest.

It is traditionally celebrated from Dec. 26 to Jan. 1, but was moved to this past week because of the university's Christmas break.

The week's activities included programs concerning each of the seven principles of Kwanzaa: unity, self-determination, collective work and responsibility, cooperative economics, purpose, creativity, and faith. Each day a candle was lit to represent one of these principles.

Three killed in 896 crash

by Tom Hals

Three Middletown residents died Thursday after the driver lost control of their car and slammed into three trees by the side of Route 896, a half mile south of Newark, according to Newark Police.

Christopher L. Shipley, 21, Kimberly Ann Spohn, 20, and Krystal Marshall, 18, were all pronounced dead on arrival at Christiana Hospital just before midnight Thursday, police said.

The driver of the car, Jay Brackin Jr., 21, of Townsend, was treated for head and internal injuries and was listed in critical condition Sunday.

A preliminary State Police investigation suggests the involvement of alcohol in the accident.

Police said Brackin was the only one wearing a seatbelt.

Police gave this account of the crash:

Brackin, who was driving a Pontiac Sunbird at an apparent high rate of speed, tried to pass a truck on the right by going onto the shoulder.

Brackin lost control of the car, and at 10:55 p.m. the car hit three trees in succession before coming to rest.

Spohn and Shipley were ejected from the vehicle upon impact with the third tree.

The vehicle stopped about 40 feet from the first tree trunk.

Brick landing gets white coat of paint

Someone caused $3,000 in damage to a brick landing on South College Avenue by painting slogans on the brick with white paint, sometime between Friday night and Saturday morning, Newark Police said.

The person painted a couple of large crosses and the words "Jerry" and "food" on the brick, police said.

Gun used to solve parking problems

A woman threatened a man who was sitting in a parked car with a gun during an argument in the College Square Parking Lot Sunday evening, Newark Police said.

Police gave the following account:

The man was blocking an open parking space while waiting to pick his mother up from work.

Another woman pulled in the parking lot and wanted the space he was blocking.

The man started to back up and then pulled into the space.

The woman got mad and refused to park her car anywhere else.

Then the man decided to leave the car to enter a department store and passed the woman on his way.

He asked her to remove her car and when she refused, he spit inside of the car.

The woman then became angry and grabbed a .22-caliber gun, pointed it at the man and yelled at him.

The man fled to the department store and called the police.

Car door damaged on Thorne Lane

A 1986 Isuzu parked on Thorne Lane had an estimated $200 damage done to the driver's side door by someone kicking in the door sometime between Friday evening and Saturday morning, Newark Police said.

Domino's window broken by gun shot

Domino's Pizza on Cleveland Avenue had $600 damage done to their 6-foot by 10-foot glass window when someone shot at it early Saturday morning, Newark Police said.

Police believe that someone in a dark-colored car, that was driving by at the time, shot at the window.

$200 radar detector stolen in 7-11 lot

A Whistler Spectrum radar detector was stolen out of a car while it was parked at the 7-11 on Elkton Road for an hour on Sunday morning, Newark Police said.

The radar detector was valued at $200, police said.

1986 Camaro IROC loses radar detector

Someone smashed the passenger side window of a 1986 Camaro IROC parked in the Russell Parking Lot and stole a Passport radar detector and some cassettes early Friday morning, University Police said.

The stolen items were valued at $360 and the damaged window was estimated at $220, police said.

Three-band Bacchus concert benefits Amnesty

by Jaimi Rubin
Staff Reporter

The university chapter of Amnesty International presented a concert featuring three local bands to benefit prisoners of conscience, Thursday night.

The bands One, Parrish Blue and The Eyes performed to about 130 people in the Bacchus Room of the Student Center.

"The concert took place to raise both political awareness and funds for Amnesty," said Jonathan Cohen (AS 89), the coordinator for the university chapter of Amnesty International.

"This campus needs events that get people involved, but with meaning behind them," Cohen said.

Amnesty International works for the release of prisoners of conscience — men, women and children imprisoned for their beliefs, color, sex, ethnic origin, language or religion, provided they have neither used nor advocated violence.

"We raised $400, which is more than we expected," Cohen said.

Steve Gigante of the band The Eyes said, "I'm really excited about the opportunity to participate in the concert. It's for an important cause."

Charlie Crystle, a member of Parrish Blue, said, "This is an important concert because of the issues it represents."

Crystle said although Parrish Blue does not preach any beliefs in their music, they "are not oblivious to what is going on in the world."

Alcohol committee holds vigil to remember deaths

by John Schneider
Staff Reporter

West Campus students lit 267 candles Friday night outside Rodney Dining Hall, each symbolizing one of the alcohol-related deaths that occur nationwide each day.

The Alcohol Abuse Committee, composed of students from Dickinson and Rodney dorms, set up the display and kept the candles going throughout the night.

The committee planned the vigil for Alcohol Awareness Week but rain forced them to reschedule the event.

Committee-member Beth Hanst (BE 89) said, the group is not trying to ban alcohol on campus.

Hanst said the committee is concerned with educating younger students, particularly freshmen, who have little or no experience with responsible drinking.

"We're not anti-alcohol. We're anti-alcohol abuse," Hanst said.

"Drinkers need to be responsible, whether they're underage or not," she continued. "These candles also represent people who have died from long-term effects of alcohol."

Running from 4 p.m. to 1 a.m., the vigil attracted much attention from those who passed by.

It was important for the vigil to be visible, Hanst said. The more people see events such as a vigil, the more aware they will be of the problem of alcohol-related inci-

RSA votes to pull Review ads; charges paper with unfair coverage

by Ralph Baird
Staff Reporter

The Resident Student Association (RSA) voted 24-5 with one abstention Sunday to boycott advertising in The Review, following a presentation by a member of the Cultural Programming Advisory Board (CPAB).

Kevin Kelley, also of the Center for Black Culture, charged The Review has not provided adequate and representative coverage of student organizations this semester.

Kelley discussed the possibility of forming a coalition of student organizations such as CPAB, RSA, the Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress (DUSC) and the Student Programming Association (SPA) to bring about change in The Review's coverage.

RSA members supported Kelley and his recommendation to boycott advertising in The Review. He stressed the existence of more advertising media and press on campus.

RSA president Denise Brown agreed with Kelley, and accused The Review of reporting only sensational stories.

Kelley and Brown said it would take very strong opposition to effect their plan of getting what they deem as fairer coverage of student organizations.

Brown said it was an important issue, one where a stand needs to be taken.

The presentation stemmed from the concerns of the CPAB and the Center for Black Culture that The Review has not printed

Career Planning to gain additional job information

by Stephanie Ebbert
Copy Editor

As the semester comes to a close and spring semester approaches, seniors will be faced with important decisions — how and where to begin their careers after graduation.

To aid in this decision-making process, the Career Planning and Placement office will be offering new information on career opportunities, sponsored by CareerVision Information Centers.

CareerVision, a new educational publishing company, provides job information geared primarily toward college seniors and recent graduates seeking jobs, according to Jeanne M. Campo, campus representative for CareerVision.

Beginning in January, Career

Planning and Placement will house CareerVision binders, which contain information on specific companies in 21 industries, including banking, finance, advertising, health care and engineering, Campo said.

"This greatly expands the information we can have available to the students who research companies," said David J. Berilla, associate director for employer relations at Career Planning and Placement.

Though the office already offers job information on companies in a variety of fields, Campo said CareerVision will offer information on a broader range of companies in a more concise form.

"This is more like a centralized information center," she said.

CareerVision binders can help students select prospective jobs and learn something about the companies prior to their interviews, Campo added.

"I think it's really important to get company information before you go on a job interview," she said.

Berilla said currently, students receive job information mainly from companies which recruit students on campus.

CareerVision "greatly expands your ability to see the companies you want to see," Berilla said.

He added that CareerVision information will be current and kept up-to-date.

"One of the things I think is frustrating is that when you research something, it seems as if the data is one or two or three years old," he said.

After a student locates a particular job, he or she can then phone CareerVision's toll-free "fulfillment service" for additional information and recruitment materials on the position or company.

CareerVision will also be distributing CareerVision Magazine free-of-charge three times a year, Campo said.

The magazine will include information on salaries and summer jobs, and will either be distributed in a mass mailing or will be available at Career Planning and Placement, she added.

Good Spirited

'Tis the season to be jolly.

In the excitement of the season, mirth and good cheer overflow, along with the alcohol found at holiday parties nationwide.

Closer to home, campus parties reflect the contagious anticipation of the holiday season and the end of a semester's worth of academia — it is a time of celebration.

On the duller side, the pressures of final exams and the fulfillment of course requirements lead many students to drink and be merry. However, caught up in the spirit of celebration, many times they dangerously exceed a safe level of merriment.

Along with the scholastic pressures so prevalent in the academic circle at this time of year, the weight of depression due to feelings of loneliness rests on the minds and hearts of many.

Sometimes, the blurred reality found after a few drinks is more tolerable than facing the sober truth.

The fatal link between drinking and driving only strengthens around the holidays, as transportation to and from seasonal soirees increases the potential for alcohol-related accidents.

This holiday season, let's all use our heads. If you're going to drink, drink responsibly and logically. If you're driving home from festivities, it doesn't take more than a second to fasten a seat belt and — don't get behind that wheel if you don't belong there. Don't be too proud to hand over the keys to someone more capable, someone who has been designated to drive.

Be sensitive to the needs of people who might not be filled with the holiday spirit, due to personal, family or academic problems. Be alert and recognize when a simple word of encouragement can soothe their feelings of emptiness.

Christmas and Hanukkah are joyful celebrations of peace, love and life. Don't do anything this holiday season that could overshadow their brilliance.

The beauty of the season lives in all of us — and it's a beautiful season in which to live.

Another Fact of Life

This weekend, amidst the joyful decorations and happiness associated with the coming holidays, I was sadly reminded of life's brevity.

I attended a burial mass for a friend's grandfather. Although I had never met the man, I could hardly help feeling sad seeing so many mourn for a loved one.

No matter how many times we must deal with death in our lives, it never gets any easier to accept or understand. It is a sad, yet inevitable fact of life.

One of the hardest things I ever had to do was say good-bye to my grandmother, who was dying of cancer. When I went home to visit her two months ago, I knew deep down that it would be for the last time.

I sat at the foot of her bed in the hospital and talked about all the great times we had shared when I was younger. When I left, I kissed her good-bye and told her how much I loved her. She died five days later.

Death at any age is difficult to accept. Because we're young, we don't think of our friends' or relatives' mortality, much less our own. This is both sad and unfortunate, because by the time we do realize how brilliant, yet brittle life is, it is often too late.

Every now and then, you hear someone mention how young people believe they are immortal. I didn't think I was immortal, but I never thought people my age should be concerned with dying — we're too young for that.

That all changed about two years ago when a friend from high school became a shocking reminder of our vulnerability.

Here was a guy my age with his whole life ahead of him. President of the senior class, John was a smart, out-going person who seemed to get along with everybody. He was life personified.

John's life ended in February, 1987, in a car accident on the New Jersey Turnpike.

That was probably one of the scariest times of my life. Not so much because John and I were close friends, because we weren't — but we were friends.

What was scary, however, was the fact that he was my age and wanted the same things out of life that everyone else my age wanted, and the desire to get them. And now he was dead.

It's all so damn final. Death rarely gives you time to prepare — time to tell those you love how you feel.

So much time is spent on trivial matters in life, that we often overlook the more important things. I used to think it was corny, but you'd be surprised how good it makes you feel just to say, "I love you, Mom" or "I love you, Dad," or to tell your friends how much they mean to you.

This holiday season, learn to appreciate how great life can be. I'm not saying sit around and think of death and dying, in fact, I'm saying just the opposite. Spend time with the people you care about, and let them know you care. Take the time to celebrate life while you still can.

Life is short. And while it is true you only live once — if you live it right, once is enough.

Restatement of news and editorial policy

The Review is the newspaper of the University of Delaware and the city of Newark. Acting as an independent, student-operated news agency, its expressed purpose is to give responsible news coverage to those areas it deems important and of interest to its readers. It acts as a forum for free expression and a place where intelligent commentary and criticism on issues concerning its readers is presented.

The Review is a registered student organization, but remains editorially and financially autonomous. All expenses are covered by the newspaper's advertising revenues. The Review does not receive funds from the university to cover operational costs of publication.

The Review was first published in September 1882 as The Delaware College Review, a monthly tabloid with a circulation of 1,000. Publication frequency has fluctuated over the years, most recently changing to its twice-weekly publication schedule on Jan. 29, 1971. With 14,000 copies of the newspaper now distributed every Tuesday and Friday across Newark, The Review is one of the largest collegiate twice-weeklies in the country.

The advertising and business departments of The Review operate independently from the editorial/news department. By doing this, The Review strives to retain objectivity and avoid conflicts of interest between the advertising and business sections and the editorial/news department.

The strength of a newspaper rests in its pursuit of three ideals: accuracy, fairness and honesty.

As journalists, we have a special place in the community — we are empowered and expected to make fair, intelligent critical comment on our peers. Without the support of our own convictions and dedication to these ideals, we have usurped that power.

Binge and Purge

As hundreds of students hurriedly filled out their schedules at the last possible moment, familiar cries rang out—Who's the easiest prof? Is that class hard? How much work do you have to do?

Never have I heard someone ask, "Did you learn anything?"

Finals week only echoes this widespread acceptance of ignorance.

Students subject themselves to Vivarin and coffee-induced tremors and unwillingly engage in sleep-deprivation studies. Nothing exists except for the next 72 hours. Then, as suddenly as the multitude of facts entered their frenzied brains, they're gone, wiped clean, file deleted.

Fletcher Chambers

Choke down a minimal number of facts and puke 'em back—God Bless multiple choice.

Yes kids, we are rapidly becoming a nation of mental bulimics — even (and in many cases especially) students with sterling GPAs are victims of this learning disorder.

Bulimia and the study habits of most students are remarkably similar. They both begin with noble ideals: an attractive body, good grades or just graduating.

Somewhere along the line, the ideal becomes obsession. Body-image or GPA rules a person's life. Binging and purging becomes the route to success.

Both leave a person emaciated, physically or intellectually.

Quick seniors, what did you learn freshman year? What did you take freshman year?

How many of us came to college with the primary intention of increasing our earning potential? I know I did. Polishing my limited intellect wasn't an issue until recently.

I found out this university has students who can't find America on a map. Hard to believe.

A prof. of mine addressed grade-fixation in a lecture one day. He asked the students if they were immediately given an A for the course, who would continue to come to class.

Not a hand went up.

Too seldom do we take courses solely for mental stimulation. Pass/Fail helps alleviate this to a degree. Unfortunately most students opt for a GPA booster instead. You know the courses—they're the one's that are tough to get.

How many courses do you plan on taking after graduation just because you enjoy learning?

It's not our fault alone. Think about how many classes you've had where the grade you received accurately reflected the knowledge you gained.

I'm by no means accusing the university of neglecting us. However, when professors are subjected to intense deadlines for submitting grades it kind of limits testing methods.

If you had 80 students and 48 hours to turn in grades, what kind of test would you give? Tenure isn't granted on the basis of teaching ability alone.

The most animated and thought-provoking of professors will be unemployed if they can't bring prestige to their institution in some form—research, publication or otherwise.

No one would argue that contemporary education problems begin at the university level—they begin at the cradle.

Parents, teachers, government, and taxpayers are left with the burden.

But until the students themselves are willing to focus on learning as well as earning, reform will be ineffective.

We have to stop worrying only about being better and wealthier than the other guy—and work to better ourselves.

Fletcher Chambers is a city editor of The Review.

Reader says 'No, Sir' to PLO's Yasser

I disagree with the views expressed by the United Nations and The Review editors regarding the refusal of the State Department to grant a visa to Yasser Arafat. The PLO, which Arafat heads, is directly responsible for many terrorists acts and the murder of many innocent people. Among them are 11 Israeli athletes at the 1972 Olympics, 24 children at Maalot, 35 men, women and children near Tel Aviv, as well as the U.S. ambassador to Sudan. These acts were not freakish outbursts by overzealous splinter members, nor accidental incidents that occurred during the course of a war, but calculated and deliberately planned incidents with at least Arafat's approval, if not his direct participation. While the Arab inhabitants of the West bank and Gaza have some legitimate grievances against the Israeli government, this does not justify giving Arafat and his organization any legitimacy beyond that of a terrorist organization. Regarding our obligation to the U.N., perhaps we should grant Arafat a visa, arrest him on arrival and indict him for his complicity in terrorism, air and sea piracy, and murder.

IFC elects officers for spring semester

by Phil Simmons
Staff Reporter

The Interfraternity Council (IFC) elected officers for the spring semester at its meeting Monday.

The elections included appointments for three recently-created positions: Judicial/Social Chairman, Pledge Education Chairman and Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress representative (DUSC).

IFC, which sets fraternity policies and organizes many Greek events, consists of representatives from each fraternity, in addition to the 13 offices.

The newly elected IFC President Robert W. Stratton (EG 89) said, "The job of the Pledge Education Chairman is to set up seminars through the university on matters relevant to Greek life, and to organize the IFC pledge curriculum."

Robert Stratton

"The Judicial Chairman's job," Stratton continued, "will be to enforce the rules set by IFC on things like rush, pledging and the social policies that were just passed."

Current IFC President Brian Cronin (AS 89) said the DUSC representative will voice IFC's views at DUSC meetings and will be able to vote on DUSC issues.

Kevin L. Howard (AS 90), the new Judicial Chairman, said his goals are to organize and implement the judicial court as quickly as possible.

"IFC has been trying to make a surge to become a more assertive body on the Greeks, and one way we felt we could bring about a better Greek community was with a Greek court,"

Raub Hall installs alarms for greater resource security

by Rich Ellis
Copy Editor

A new security-detection system designed to stop the theft of resource material has been installed in the Career Planning and Placement Office, according to center officials.

Since the system was installed in mid October, there have been no materials stolen from the center, according to Cindy Holland, Career Resource Center coordinator.

The "Checkpoint System," similar to the one located in the library, was instituted due to the continued theft of materials from the Resource Center, Holland said.

It "was installed because we were experiencing a heavy amount of resource theft over the past years," she said.

The new system was installed at a cost of about $3,000, Holland said.

Holland explained that the system "is set up so that we red-tag all of the materials in our resource center and therefore if anyone walks through the metering device [with resource materials] an alarm will go off."

The items most frequently stolen include new resource materials, such as books, career releases and corporate literature.

"For the most part, the types of materials that seemed to be stolen were those that were the more popular items or the career information on companies that happened to be recruiting during that week," Holland added.

A small number of students have been caught trying to remove resource materials.

"At this point we just ask them to turn the materials over. So far it has resulted in nothing more than a great deal of embarrassment for the student because all heads turn," Holland said.

"Denika and New Brown Plus One" then performed their version of Motown music and were followed by Maurice Gray (AS 90) and Randie Jackson (BE 89) doing comedy and drama routines respectively.

"We want to make people aware that [Kwanzaa] does exist and what it stands for," said Jacqueline Young (EG 90), a member of the Kwanzaa/Christmas Committee.

The week-long Kwanzaa celebration was sponsored by the Cultural Programming Advisory Board and the Center for Black Culture.

Lead level in city water poses minor health threat

by Christine K. Balascio
Staff Reporter

Drinking water at some sites on campus contains lead at levels which exceed government safety standards, university officials said.

Stuart Kline, director of the university's department of Occupational Health and Safety (DOHS), said last week that "lead levels which exceeded the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) limit were found in only 5 to 10 percent of the samples."

But, "we found some traces of lead in water from every water fountain we looked at," Kline said, referring to a study done last summer by DOHS.

According to DOHS, the water entering university buildings does not contain significant concentrations of lead.

But lead can leach into the water from various sources, including lead solder connections, brass fixtures and certain water cooler components, according to DOHS.

Kline said one conclusion of the study was that "the lead in the water is associated with acid water delivered by the city of Newark."

He said "it is not unusual for the city to supply water with a pH of 6.5."

Although the pH of the water is well within the legal limits, Kline said as the acidity of the water increases, more lead can leach into the water supply.

Kline noted that "this situation is occurring across the United States. Newark is not unique."

More than 150 samples were taken in the study, which surveyed 37 buildings on campus, ranging from residential and small office buildings to large academic buildings.

The study found large variations in lead levels in samples taken across campus, with levels differing among buildings and within individual buildings.

"In one instance, lead levels were 10 times the EPA limit," Kline said, citing a sample taken from a pipe that services the third floor of Willard Hall.

The university is replacing pipes that service an area on the first floor of Willard Hall to see if this affects lead levels in the water.

Brass and bronze valves which contain lead will still be used to connect the piping.

"You can't get away from that," Kline said.

He pointed out that foul-tasting water is not always an indication of the presence of lead.

"Iron, chlorine, high copper concentrations, suspended organics and particulates, or the pH of the water all may cause the water to taste bad," he said.

In most instances, lead levels in samples taken from water fountains were much lower than in those taken from taps in bathrooms, Kline said.

This level may be because water in the taps stands longer,

Anderson also noted Korteweg had already returned to visit his girlfriend on East Campus at the time the sexual assault and other misconducts allegedly took place at the fra-

He is scheduled for arraignment at Alderman's court Dec. 12.

Anderson said when Korteweg was arrested, "He didn't realize how serious things could become."

Korteweg declined comment Sunday.

According to Newark Police, if he is found guilty of the alcohol charges, he will be fined not less than $100 and no more than $400.

Korteweg also faces up to a $100 fine if found guilty of maintaining a disorderly premise.

"We believe our investigation has been complete," Anderson said. "We have a good idea of what happened that night."

He added that victims were advised to contact police if they are harassed for coming forth.

Anderson also emphasized that Newark Police are proud of the women for having the courage to speak up.

Cruelty to animals protested during Wilmington rally

by Karen Wolf
Assistant News Editor

Like animals without a coat, around 40 anti-fur demonstrators shivered in the brisk air Saturday as they lined the sidewalk of the Prices Corner Shopping Center in Wilmington to protest the abuse of animals in the making of fur coats.

Waving signs reading, among other statements, "People are animals too. Don't wear fur," and "Have a conscience, don't wear fur," the protesters from the Delaware Action for Animals appealed to the holiday crowds pulling into and driving past the shopping center on Kirkwood Highway.

Vice President Cindy Abramowicz explained the holiday season provided a prime opportunity for the protesters to deliver their message.

"In the first two weeks of December, the most 'ranch' raised animals are killed," she said, "and it is also the biggest selling season for fur."

"We want to get people to know that it's not chic to wear fur," she added.

The non-profit action group located in Wilmington has been organized for one year.

It consists of "all volunteers who are trying to stem the use and abuse of animals in Delaware," Abramowicz said.

Although this was only the second demonstration held by the 300-member group since its inception, they have also helped support animal rights through legislation.

"[Legislation] is the best way to make things better for animals," she said, adding that the group succeeded last year by having fines increased for the promotion of animal fighting.

Many protesters at the rally expressed the futility in the making of fur coats.

"I believe in not exploiting animals for rich people to wear. Fur belongs on animals backs—not people's," said Laura Gordon.

Another demonstrator said many people excuse belongings out of the car.

The attendant allowed the man access to the car, police said, though no identification was presented at that time.

The man drove off with the car without the consent of the attendant and has not been located.

Police said it was not until after the car was taken from the lot that the license plate was determined stolen.

The LTD was owned by Cohen's parents, as was a second car found abandoned in Chester, Pa. on Nov. 15. Cohen, who transferred to the university this fall when he and his parents moved to Delaware from Illinois in April, has been charged with two counts of both first-degree murder and possession of a deadly weapon while committing a felony.

Students express concern with amount of laboratory killings

by Edward Bockius
Staff Reporter

Several students in a laboratory section of a human physiology course are disturbed by the number of animals killed in class experiments.

In the Human Anatomy and Physiology lab section of Biology 416, students have experimented on turtles, rats and frogs, sometimes cutting the animals open while they are still alive.

Although some students in the class said they view the experiments as necessary, they said the number of animals killed could be greatly reduced.

One student, who requested anonymity, said five turtles, four rats and about 20 frogs are killed for experiments each semester.

The student also said the frogs' brains are pithed by smashing the brain with a mallet.

In addition, the turtles' shells are removed while they are still alive in order to expose the heart for close examination.

Many of the students said they could learn just as much by watching their teaching assistant perform a dissection as they do by dissecting the animals themselves.

"It's hard to go into a lab and watch someone kill six frogs when the experiment can be demonstrated with one frog," one student said.

"There is no difference in watching someone else do the experiment and doing it yourself. It is just like you're doing it."

But biology professor Robert Eisenberg disagreed. "I do not think demonstrations are a substitute for direct experience. You are not going to learn the same amount if you just watch," he said.

He explained that since the class is a 400-level course and is for students concentrating on a career in medicine, the experiments are necessary.

Britt Sanford (AS GM), the class' teaching assistant said, "I agree wholeheartedly with the students. I have a lot of difficulty with [killing animals for lab experiments]."

In a graduate-level class, 16 pigs were recently killed in one day, and could be heard squealing, Sanford said. He also said the larger animals are taken into a room where they are killed.

While neither the students nor Sanford feel all experiments should be replaced by demonstrations, most believe the number of animals killed could be reduced.

allowing more lead to leach into it, he said.

Kline encouraged everyone to follow the federal government's advice and "run the tap for one to two minutes before drinking from it."

This will purge the line of standing water which might contain a high lead level, he said.

"Do this at work, at home, and wherever you go," Kline said.

According to information provided by DOHS, a growing body of research suggests there may be no "safe" level of lead intake.

Those most at risk from lead exposure are children and pregnant women.

Low-level lead intake can damage the nervous system and impair intelligence and hearing.

It may also cause irritability and aggravate high blood pressure.

Fighting the battle of his life

by David Blenckstone
Staff Reporter

Jeff Jones just finished telling a friend about his weekend at home.

"I was vomiting," he said, describing a dismal part of his visit. "I'm psyched because it's over."

Sound like the flu? Food poisoning? A rough night out? Perhaps — but not even close.

Nausea is just one side effect of chemotherapy, a treatment for cancer.

On July 29, 1987, Jones, a university junior, was diagnosed as having a tumor in the core of his brain.

One week later, he was operated on at the University of Pennsylvania Hospital.

And that was just the beginning.

For the past 15 months, Jones has endured the pain of radiation treatments and chemotherapy. In practice, chemotherapy helps combat cancerous tumors with chemicals.

Jones' doctors felt the treatment was necessary because surgery did not remove the entire tumor.

"The doctors told me that they [removed] more than they thought they would," Jones said, referring to his tumor, "but not as much as they would have liked."

Since the cancer was diagnosed, Jones has lost 50 pounds, evident by his wiry frame.

He has also lost some of his peripheral vision and has experienced a gradual hearing loss.

Headaches and nausea have become everyday events. And, he has gone through the most obvious effect of chemotherapy — the loss of his hair.

But Jones said he believes that the toughest part of his ordeal is over.

His last chemotherapy treatment began Nov. 11,

Jeff Jones has battled his cancer with chemotherapy, radiation and a little help from his mom.

and he is now looking forward to the future.

"I like to think the [experience] will help me," he said. "After the health problems are gone, it will give me a whole different outlook on life."

Jones' ordeal began in June 1987. He suffered from terrible headaches, but didn't think they were serious. On several occasions, he came close to passing out.

Within two weeks it became worse — the pain became agonizing and the vomiting began.

The family physician could not determine what caused the symptoms.

Jones was thought to have anything from Rocky Mountain spotted fever to mononucleosis before he was finally given a CAT scan which pinpointed the problem.

The test detected a brain tumor.

At the time, the news came as quite a shock.

Jones recalled not knowing what to think about the test results and said it took some time before he could accept the diagnosis.

Eventually, he asked for help.

"I did not believe in God and I still don't," Jones admitted, "but I prayed the night before the surgery and I asked people to pray for me.

"I guess [that's] hypocritical."

With a little help from his mother, Jones kept an optimistic outlook throughout most of his ordeal.

"My mom helped the most," he said. "She was always optimistic, I got depressed a lot, but never pessimistic."

Of course, there were very difficult periods, and Jones recalled many times when he thought he might die.

Doctors told him there would be a 95 percent chance of surviving the surgery, but that the chances of mental retardation would be greater.

Jones' medical treatment is not yet complete, the student must still receive two more chemotherapy injections.

In addition, every three months for the next year, he will undergo a CAT scan to make sure the tumor

Lovers, a play written by award-winning Irish playwright Brian Friel, is based in the mid-60s and focuses on life of the Irish middle-class.

Irish 'Lovers' speak another language

by Melissa Price
Staff Reporter

If Irish eyes are smiling, they're probably not watching University Theatre's production of Lovers, the work of award-winning Irish playwright, Brian Friel.

Lovers, set in mid-60s Ireland, explores the problems of young people struggling to escape habit and express their heartfelt feelings honestly.

The play, which examines the folkways of the Irish middle class, begins with the young lovers, Joe and Mag, studying for their final exams in the Irish equivalent of American high school.

During the study session, Joe, more ambitious than his counterpart Mag, sits motionless, apparently mesmerized by his math book.

At the same time, Mag rhapsodizes about their forthcoming marriage, baby and life in general.

The director, Dr. Karen Higgins-Hurley, seems to have overlooked the possibility that Joe's ambition and stu-

Pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act of 1977, a former U of D president's agenda became a matter of public record on Dec. 3. On the advice of legal counsel I have decided not to name this ex-president.

Kevin Bixby

However, I feel it is my duty to inform you that in my first two years at this university, I lived in Russell C. Furthermore, you may find it interesting to note that one of America's most popular surnames is Jones.

But anyway, back to this unnamed president's agenda. Had the president been able to persuade an arbitrary and stubborn board of directors, the following changes may have been enacted:

- If this president had his way, by 1992, the seldom-used and misappropriated Harrington Beach would have served as the site for a 24-hour tire-burning compound.

The plant would have bridged the rubber burning capability gap between this and other major East Coast universities as well as brought in hundreds of dollars in annual revenues.

The senior project engineer report,

Feature Forum

Visions of absurdity

authored by Dr. Steven Q. Shaddybush (FDIC), stated, "Any pollutionary fumes would be effectively eliminated by a 247-foot smoke stack and a series of strategically placed 19-inch paddle fans."

Many insiders maintain that the fund allocation was a key stumbling block and may have led to the mysterious and hasty removal of this president.

- The second improvement would have had obvious benefits for all students. The plan was a simple one: replace all of the conventional glass on the Habitrail with bullet-proof glass.

This, of course, would have been done to gain a foothold on the increasing number of student assassinations by enemy sniper fire.

- Another ill-fated proposal, which was an attempt to answer public outcry for easier access to Interstate 95 from Newark, was a $57.2 million offramp to be located adjacent to Dickinson residence hall.

However, when it was discovered, four months later, that I-95 is more than two miles from this site, the plan was scrapped.

- Still another plan which would have thrown the mental stability of the ex-president into question, while simultaneously creating a major northeastern NASA Center for space exploration, was the proposed conversion of North Campus into a space shuttle launching pad.

The pad itself would be located in the commons of Christiana Towers. This would necessitate the conversion of each tower into a solid fuel rocket booster.

Interestingly, the cost of this conversion would far exceed the cost of building it from scratch.

A rider on this proposal was the requirement that the ex-president command and fly the first shuttle mission. Sources close to the proceedings confirmed reports that this was the reason the plan was not implemented.

- Perhaps the most radical improvement would have been his last, according to my documentations. As many may know, there was once a plan to turn North Central housing (this does not imply it was at this university) into office space. It was met with heavy criticism and never begun.

The former president apparently knew it was an ill-fated plan. So in turn, he decided to create a proposal that would become his legacy.

The plan, perhaps, made too much sense. Ideally, the same North Central residence halls would play the key role once again. The back-up plan guaranteed success.

Fortunately, for North Central residents and unfortunately for chicken lovers of the free world, the ex-president wanted to implement the nation's first full-service combination chicken coop and Civil War wax museum.

The ideas seemed endless, until the end of this certain presidency in the month of October.

The visionary nature of this ex-president's agenda reflects his optimism, his academic and community responsibility and a desire to enter new fields of interest for his university.

His itinerary would have perhaps revolutionized the American university. The only obstacle to this vision was its utter absurdity.

* A special thanks to Bob Koontz and Steve Herbst for their help.

possibility that Joe's ambition diousness could have been conveyed without making his math book the focal point of the first half hour of the play.

Although some of Mag's monologue sounded interesting, Joe's dogged attention to his studies made the audience wonder if the contents of the book really were more interesting than what his girlfriend was saying.

Subtle shifts in posture, gesture and facial expression, which may have made the initial part of the play more entertaining, were lacking.

This brings about one of the central problems with the production, especially in the first part, and that is the lack of variation in delivery and emotional level.

What is important in both art and life are moments of enlightenment, revelation and insight -- all of which are missing from Higgins-Hurley's adaptation.

There are no special moments in this play because no one has taken the time to find them.

Another problem, more fundamental than those already mentioned, was understanding much of the dialogue because of the quick and unclear delivery.

The acoustics in Mitchell Hall didn't help much — there are none.

Overall, Kate Brennan was okay as the sometimes-spirited, always-charming, Mag.

Her performance, however, only occasionally seemed genuine, she seemed to let the intended poignancy of her character escape her unnoticed.

Mag's more serious, much less talkative, fiance' Joe was competently performed by Jon Cooper, although Cooper appears almost catatonic during much of the first portion of the play.

The production's second part is separate from and substantially more entertaining than the first.

In this part of the play, an aging man named Andy reminisces about his courtship days.

Andy remembers when he and his wife, Hanna, were passionately in love and he was forced to battle his wife's invalid mother for Hanna's attention.

Barclay Jefferis, a graduate of the University Theatre program, is wonderfully believable and funny as Andy, while Trish Francy is quite good as the long-suffering Hanna.

As Mrs. Wilson (Hanna's annoyingly pious and demanding mother), Alison Van Deursen was adequate, although her character could have benefitted from some vocal variation and more depth of character.

Lovers' performance at Mitchell Hall will continue until Dec. 10.

has not spread.

After that, he will be tested every six months for the next few years, and then annually for the rest of his life.

Though he occasionally suffers from headaches at night and is not allowed to drive in the dark, Jones said he is happy that his chemotherapy is almost complete.

He admitted he is still apprehensive about the future but firmly believes that he will not allow himself to be bothered by the lifetime testing.

"Not knowing about [more cancer] would be worse," Jones said.

"I would rather know, one way or the other."

For now, the tough part is over and Jones is getting back into the swing of things.

Despite his cancer, Jones missed only one semester of classes in the fall of 1987, and returned the following spring to take 12 credits.

He said a quick return to the university was the best thing for him.

"I would have gone crazy if I stayed at home," he said.

Erik Lige (AS 90), Jones' roommate last spring, said he is impressed at how quickly his friend has bounced back from his illness.

"It's amazing he was at school," Lige said. "There would be mornings when he woke up and would be sick to his stomach."

As for his social life, Jones said he believes the cancer has actually helped in some ways.

"I've met people," he said with a grin, "because they want to know someone with a brain tumor."

On weekends that he is not in the hospital, Jones goes home to rest and eat home-cooked meals.

Although his doctors have not put any restrictions on him, he said any recreation is, at times, limited.

When asked if the doctors allow him to drink alcohol yet, Jones replied, "They told me to drink a lot of beer so I will gain weight."

Jones says he is trying to take the experience in stride and hopes that it will build his character.

And, along the way, he may help to build a few other people's characters and give them hope in times of need.

"I learned a lot about courage and determination [from Jeff]," Lige commented about his living with Jones.

"I hope if I ever go through something like Jeff has, I could face it as well as [him]."

Jones said he may never feel completely confident that the cancer is gone.

But his optimism shines through again as he pensively remarked, "Even if I die from this cancer, the life I live from now until then will be better than the life I lived before."

Mead, a freshman, set a new university record in the backstroke with a time of 1:58.07.

Martin, a senior, is yet to be beaten in the breaststroke in his collegiate career. Edmonds and McCormick, also seniors, are undefeated this year in their 100-yard freestyle and butterfly events, respectively.

In addition to her school and pool record, Urbani also qualified for the NCAA Zone B and the Eastern Seaboard three-meter competitions. She had already qualified for the NCAA one-meter event earlier this season against Clemson.

"I was really happy," said Ip. "[The meet] was a good indicator of what we can do.

"A lot of our freshmen are maturing very quickly," he added. "We will do what it takes to win the ECC's."

Preseason meet shows promise for Hens

by Carin Draney
Assistant Sports Editor

Nothing could be more rewarding than knowing all the preseason training is about to pay off.

Such is the case for the Delaware women's indoor track and field team who competed in the Bucknell Invitational on Friday.

Although the competition was merely a developmental meet to see where the teams stood prior to the season's start, the Hens were pleased.

"It's nice to see," said Delaware Head Coach Sue McGrath-Powell, "but we still have a ways to go."

Basically, the meet proved the Hens are in a good position competitively.

Aimee Dempsey ran well for Delaware, finishing second in the 440 meters with a time of 62.4.

But it wasn't only Dempsey who had a good day.

She, along with teammates Ingrid Hohmann, Evelyn Campbell and Connie Poge took a second place in the mile relay event.

Two freshmen newcomers put on quite a display in the jumping events.

Dawn Sullivan, who excelled at the high school level, has made a smooth transition to collegiate competition.

The high jumper sailed over a five-foot bar, five inches shy of her personal best.

The other newcomer, Pauline Dargis, seized a third-place finish in the triple jump to astonish her competitors.

Perhaps this meet was not a true reflection of the talent Delaware possesses, since only 13 members of the Hen squad were able to attend. But...

"It was a good experience for the whole team," said McGrath-Powell. "It kind of makes the other kids wish they could have gone."

...Penn

Steinwedel.

This is the ever-popular rebuilding year for the Hens. They lost nine players from last year's 19-9 team. It will take time for the team to gel. Saturday was a prime example of that.

"It's just a question of us sticking together, developing the experience and playing tough," said Perry.

"There's no doubt that we have the talent. We believe in each other and that's what it's all about."

Delaware will see how far the power of positive thinking can take them tonight at the Field House against Caldwell College at 7:30 p.m.

Attention:

There will be an organizational softball meeting today at 4 p.m. in Carpenter Sports Building. See Coach Ferguson for more info.

Hens forget fundamentals in defeat

by Ken Kerschbaumer
Sports Editor

If there is one thing which becomes more apparent to each passing generation, it is that there is one key to success:

Strong fundamentals.

Whether reading and arithmetic in the world of academia, or boxing out and hitting the clutch shot in the world of basketball, without the fundamentals, success is impossible.

The Delaware women's basketball team experienced what it's like when the fundamentals break down last Thursday, when they fell to Morgan State, 63-55.

"We didn't play very well," said junior center Debbie Eaves. "We got out-rebounded and that was the key."

The fundamentals.

Morgan State out-rebounded the Hens 41-29, and it was on the offensive boards, particularly where Morgan State beat Delaware, often getting two, three or even six shots on one possession.

"They killed us on the boards," said guard Linda Malouf.

The first half was evenly played by both teams, as they stayed within three or four points of each other for the half.

Delaware's offensive highlight of the evening came when they embarked on an eight-point run, which ended with a four-point Delaware lead. But Morgan State bounced back to slide into half time with a 27-25 advantage.

The second half picked up where the first left off, as Morgan State maintained a six to eight-point lead for most of the final half. Delaware pulled to within five with two minutes to play, but Morgan

"They played harder than we did. They were definitely beat-able, we just didn't have it in us."

— Debbie Eaves

State guard Debbie Grey hit nine free throws to seal the envelope on Delaware's fate.

The diminutive Grey, who stands 5 feet tall, led all scorers with 21 points, hitting 11 of 13 from the line.

"She's a pretty good player," said junior guard Tracey Robinson, who tossed in 13 points and dished out a career-high nine assists. Robinson also finished with five steals.

Eaves led the Hens as she chipped in 18 points from the low post while grabbing nine rebounds.

The big problem for Delaware offensively was the inability of Malouf and company to can the base line or perimeter jumper.

The Hens didn't get the ball into the low post as often as Delaware Coach Joyce Perry would have liked, and this only increased the shooting problem tenfold.

"We had to start our offense really far out, near half-court instead of near the foul line like we usually do," said Malouf.

Defensively, the Hens played well, with the exception of boxing out underneath for rebounds. They were able to hold Morgan State's field goal percentage under 40 percent.

But while Delaware did a good job defending Morgan State's shots, they sometimes did too good of a job, as the Hens sent Morgan State to the line 25 times in the game.

"Fouling in the act of shooting really hurt us," said Robinson.

Again, fundamentals.

"They played harder than we did," said Eaves. "They were definitely beatable, we just didn't have it in us."

And if there is one fundamental that can carry a team, it is desire to win. But on this night, Delaware didn't have it. As for the future...

"Our hustle and desire will take us further," said Robinson. That's more like it.

The Review/Dan Della Piazza

Senior guard Tracey Robinson scored 13 points and had a career high nine assists in Delaware's 63-55 loss to Morgan.

Edmonds never treads water

by Maurice Gray
Staff Reporter

The Delaware swim team got off to a slow start this season, but after winning their last three meets, they are coming on strong.

Their resurgence is largely due to the efforts of senior Scott Edmonds.

The Wilmington native is undefeated in the 50-meter freestyle so far and boasts three 100-meter freestyle wins. In addition to his individual accomplishments, Edmonds has been the anchor leg of three victorious 400-meter relay medleys.

And his best is yet to come.

Edmonds attributes his talent to a natural affinity for swimming as well as good physical fitness, which he feels is important for any athlete.

"I'm tall and have low body fat," the business major said. "Over the summer, I went from a 42-inch chest to a 45, using weights."

Edmonds, who has been swimming since he was 10 years old, credits his older brother, Stewart, as having a strong influence in his choice of sports. The elder Edmonds graduated from the university in 1982.

"My brother was Mr. All-State in everything else — football, baseball and basketball. Swimming is something I can do that he can't," explained Edmonds.

He said his academic performance is reflected in his swimming.

"The better I do in grades, the better I do in swimming," he said.

Again, it is the friendly competition with his brother that motivates him to excel.

"[Stewart] was a dean's list student in mechanical engineering," added Edmonds. As for himself, he currently carries a 3.7 grade point average, which truly seems to reflect in his swimming.

Personal tragedy has also provided an extra motivation for this swim season.

"Mom passed away in the middle of last season," said Edmonds. "I'm dedicating this season as a tribute to her."

As a result, he has set higher goals for himself.

Last year, he won the East Coast Conference title in the 50-yard freestyle. Edmonds will settle for no less than ECC swimmer of the year this winter.

Edmonds is optimistic about the team's chances from here on out.

"I think the rest of the year, we won't lose," he predicted.

It's hard for any team to lose when one of its best members has such a winning attitude.

The Review/Dan Della Piazza

Scott Edmonds is one of the reasons for the Hens swimming success last year and this year in the East Coast Conference.

1988: The Year of the total athlete

In the world of sports there are a select few athletes who are able to dominate a sport and play it at a higher level than their peers.

With 1988 coming to a rapid end, the following 10 athletes turned in the most impressive and entertaining performances of the year.

1. Mario Lemieux — The 22-year-old center for the Pittsburgh Penguins has stepped out of the shadows of Wayne Gretzky to become the premier hockey player in the world.

Kevin Bixby

In 1988, Lemieux netted 70 goals and 163 points to lead the National Hockey League in scoring. He also scored a record six points in the NHL's All-Star game — including the game-winning goal in overtime.

2. Michael Jordan — Jordan continued to dominate basketball with his elusive high-flying scoring. The NBA's leading point-getter is still the league's biggest attraction.

Averaging well over 30 points per game, Jordan also sparkled on defense — leading the league in steals. His all-around play allowed Jordan to capture his first of what will probably be many MVP awards.

3. Wayne Gretzky — Although Gretzky was "held" to 149 points in the regular season, he rebounded to lead the Oilers to their fourth Stanley Cup in five years. The Great One was named MVP of the playoffs for registering 43 points in only 19 games.

Gretzky has now given the Los Angeles Kings new life with his quick start in the 1988-89 season. There is no doubt that he is the top athlete of the 80s.

4. Greg Louganis — Louganis became the first athlete to win both diving gold medals in back-to-back Olympics.

The 28-year-old Louganis achieved the record despite receiving stitches after hitting his head on the springboard during the qualifying rounds.

5. Orel Hershiser — The Dodger pitcher achieved the unbelievable on the mound in 1988. Hershiser piled up 23 wins while compiling a rather stingy 2.26 ERA. Even more incredible was the tall righty's amazing string of 59 scoreless innings.

Hershiser continued his ways in the playoffs by picking up a couple of wins and the World Series MVP. All in all, not a bad season.

6. Matti Nykanen — The 24-year-old Flying Finn dominated the ski jumping events in Calgary to win both the 70 and 90 meter jumps. "Nukes" also helped the Finnish team to another combined-event gold.

Nykanen, a world record holder at the age of 18, has dominated one of the Winter Olympics most exciting events for years.

7. Earvin "Magic" Johnson — The 6-foot-9 guard has led the Lakers to five NBA Championships in eight seasons. Magic's personality and his ability to make everybody around him play at new heights make him one of the NBA's top commodities.

8. Randall Cunningham — There is no doubt that Cunningham should be named the NFL's most valuable player. The Philadelphia Eagles quarterback not only has become one of the leagues premier passers, he has also led the Birds in rushing.

Alone, Cunningham is responsible for over 75 percent of the Eagles' total offense. Where would they be without him?

9. Mike Tyson — Easy victories over Larry Holmes and Delaware's own Michael Spinks prove that Tyson is in a league by himself.

The undefeated heavyweight champion doesn't rate higher because his bouts are not seen by the majority of the general public since Tyson signed a contract with Home Box Office, keeping his bouts on pay TV.

10. Guy Lafleur — So maybe he doesn't deserve it, but it is always nice to see a legend come back and give it another shot. He has done so much for hockey, he deserves the chance.

Although he may have lost a step, Lafleur still has the ability to bring the Madison Square Garden fans to their feet as a member of the New York Rangers. Also, it's nice to be able to identify a player as soon as he skates on the ice since Lafleur does not have to wear a helmet.

While these 10 athletes more than did their job in their respective sports, they weren't the only exceptional ones. Steffi Graf simply tore up the women's tennis circuit and won the Grand Slam, while Jose Canseco did the job for the Oakland Athletics by batting .306 with 49 homers. As for Olympians, Florence Griffith-Joyner was phenomenal, winning three gold medals and a silver in what was easily the most impressive performance at the summer games. Carl Lewis, despite his arrogance, also deserves mention for a fine Olympics.

Hockey weekend a mixed bag for Delaware

by Craig Horleman
Sports Editor

The Delaware ice hockey club tooketh and gaveth away this weekend.

The Hens (3-4 overall, 1-1 in the Northeastern Collegiate Hockey Association) beat Navy, 6-1, Friday night but lost to the University of Pennsylvania, 4-2, on Saturday.

In the Navy game, Delaware was paced by senior Scott Lundstrom's two-goal effort. Junior defenseman Dave Bergeman scored one goal and had two assists while senior Mike Kurweg scored one goal and had an assist.

"This was definitely one of our biggest wins ever," said Bergeman.

The Midshipmen are in the Hens' division of the newly-formed conference. Until Friday night, the Hens were winless in the Southern Division. The top two teams in each division play in the conference playoffs.

Delaware used their physical prowess to the hilt in the win.

"We really worked the body well," said Bergeman.

Junior goaltender Wayne Corte had 28 saves in the contest.

The Hens did not have as good a time of it against the Quakers on Saturday, as they were down early and never got back into it. Delaware forwards were very tentative, which allowed Penn to keep the puck on the Hens' side of the ice.

Senior Tony Capozzi and Bergeman each scored a goal in the game.

The Quakers sit atop the Southern Division with a 3-1-1 mark.

Although the team sports a losing record, Delaware has a brand new attitude.

Bergeman credits Head Coach Rich Roux and the team's new entrance into a conference.

"There's such a different feeling on this club than there was in other years," said Bergeman.

It's deja vu all over again

by Carin Draney
Assistant Sports Editor

The Delaware wrestling team went in search of a new beginning and found out how hard it really is to break old habits.

On Saturday, the Hens were unable to reach out and grab a win as they completed the Lafayette Tournament with only 28 points, placing eighth in a field of nine teams.

Duke University produced four individual champions and outmaneuvered their opponents to compile 104 overall points to win the tournament.

But, while Duke experienced success, things for the Hens just aren't starting out any better than last year.

"We didn't finish as well as we wanted," said senior captain Steve Shank, "but we did see some improvement."

For Shank, a 158 pound wrestler, a first-place finish in his weight class more than likely means he doesn't have much improving to do himself.

Shank easily handled Kutztown University's Doug Rogers, 12-3, in the finals.

Sophomore Keith Neff gave an impressive performance, although it could not outdo Shank's. Neff grabbed a third-place victory and added to the Hens' points at the 118 pound position by decisioning Bruce Lafurello of Kutztown, 4-0.

Of the 12 Delaware wrestlers who competed, perhaps it was freshman Tim Kelsay who surprised everyone at 190 pounds.

Unfortunately, the freshman lost to Lafayette College's Vinnie Alvino in overtime on criteria, a specialized set of rules governing matches beyond regulation.

The loss was good enough for a fourth-place finish in his weight class.

In spite of three individual successes, the rest of the team could brush up a little before their next match-up. It is still pretty early to change habits.

Athlete of the Week

Elsworth Bowers

Senior center Elsworth Bowers scored 39 points last week and pulled down 23 rebounds as the Hens split two games. His 16 rebound effort last Tuesday against Washington College was a career high.

SPORTS PLUS

Penn pummels Hens Inexperience shows in loss

by Craig Horleman
Sports Editor

PHILADELPHIA— The Palestra.

Site of some of the finest college basketball ever.

If those walls could talk . . .

They'd probably have some pretty unprintable things to say about the Hens (1-3) Saturday afternoon as they lost to the University of Pennsylvania, 80-63.

"We didn't shoot well. We didn't execute well and our defense was not good," said Delaware Coach Steve Steinwedel.

That about says it all.

Delaware shot 30.3 percent from the field, turned the ball over 23 times and had only eight assists in the game.

After a strong start in which the Hens led by six points with 12 minutes remaining in the half, things started to fall apart.

Delaware could only muster six points in the next 11 minutes of play. This was due to the Hens having a harder time driving inside than Yasir Arafat has had getting into the United Nations. A combination of tight defense on the part of Penn and poor ball handling by the Hens resulted in Delaware having to put up many jumpers from the three-point area.

"We were much more of a perimeter team than I would have liked," said Steinwedel.

The Hens were three for 13 in three-point attempts with sophomore guard Erek Perry hitting one of seven.

Rebounds were also a problem, on both sides. Delaware outrebounded Penn 35-33, but a good deal of those Hen rebounds came at the start of the game. Perry led all players with a career-high 11 boards.

The first half ended with freshman guard Rob Jackson's 21-footer to cut Delaware's deficit to eight, 36-28.

Jackson added another three-pointer in the second half and ended the game with nine points.

Senior center Elsworth Bowers led Delaware scorers with 19 points and pulled down seven rebounds. But sophomore guard Mark Haughton and redshirted freshman Mark Murray negated Bowers performance as they hit two of 22 from the field.

Quaker forward Jerry Simon and guard Walt Frazier also had 19 points. And yes, Frazier is the son of NBA great Walt Frazier.

In the second half, Penn ran into foul trouble early. Delaware was already in the bonus situation with 12:30 remaining in the game, and the Hens made the best of it. Delaware converted 20 of 23 free-throw attempts in the half.

Perry hit two free throws at the 8:41 mark to close the game to 58-52. But Delaware couldn't get all its points in free throws. The Hens needed to score points inside as well, but only shot 27 percent in the second half from the field.

After Bowers made the front end of a one and one with 3:28 left in the game to pull the Hens to within nine, 72-63, Penn scored eight unanswered points to end it.

Freshman Alexander Coles led the Hens in the second half with nine of his 12 points.

"We put forth no effort at all today in my opinion," said

The University of Delaware displayed its aquatic power as both the men's and women's swimming teams dumped George Washington University Saturday afternoon at Carpenter Sports Building.

The men (3-2 overall, 2-0 in the East Coast Conference) marched past the Colonials (0-3) 143-98 while the women (4-2, 2-0 ECC) ambushed the ladies of G.W.U. (1-5) 135-106.

"G.W. came ready; they gave total commitment, shaved their bodies, and came after us," said Delaware Head Coach Chris Ip.

The women's team captured first places in the 400-yard medley relay (Heather McMurtrie, Wendy Sands, Barbara Ann

Testa, and Jennifer Horner), the 1000-yard freestyle (Penni

Patton), the 100-yard freestyle (Testa), and the 200-yard backstroke (McMurtrie).

In addition to those victories, freshman diver Alicia Urbani led a Hen sweep of both the one-meter and three-meter events. Delaware took the first four places in both events.

Urbani's one-meter score of 248.55 is a new university and Carpenter pool record.

"The key was when we didn't finish first, we kept taking second, third, and fourth," said Ip.

On the other side of the fence, the men took firsts in the 400-yard medley relay (Patrick Mead, Lee Martin, Rich
