University sells birth control implant

By Karen Levine

Monday the advisory became one of the five major changes in the final (controversial) new health insurance program. The majority of students felt the changes were too effective than the old health program.

Tuesday, the university students received Norplant implants at the Student Health Service at Laurel Hall.

Norplant is a contraceptive artifact placed inside a woman's upper arm, said Dr. Susan Love, gynecologist for Student Health Services. The contraceptive is an all-in-one and a single long and has its label containing the hormone progesterone, which made it out of a steady pace over five years.

"It's good within 24 hours after it's inserted," Love said. "The ability to conceive would much more short after it's removed." (See editorial page A10)

Love said the Student Health Service began offering Norplant after two students requested the contraceptive service.

The contraceptive is treasured for women who wish have long-term birth control which is reversible when the device is removed, she said.

Hilary (not her real name) was the first student to have Norplant inserted at the Student Health Service. "I'm engaged, I will be having kids probably in the future," said Hilary. Dana Mitchell (AS) and she and other Norplant inserts got the finances in their pockets in the pass.

The cost for US$36, she said, "It takes especially when you're a student and you don't have the money to pay for it."

Because Norplant is relatively new — it was opposed by the Food and Drug Administration in

About Norplant

Norplant is a contraceptive device that is implanted and is an implant that lasts long. The device is inserted in the woman's upper arm and is able to stabilize the follicular program, which prevents eggs from being released into the ovaries. The progesterone prevents ovulation and thence the corpus luteal, makes an egg harder for sperm to fertilize. The implant can be removed by a physician at any time and will be no more paid for. Student volunteers help to battle blazes

By Scott Dailey and Rebecca Totten

It was just another Sunday for Steve Vasey. The 19-year-old student and volunteer firefighter for the Cecil County Volunteer Fire Company, announced to Anne Hain, Hound Leader, that he was going to do a check-in.

Half an hour later, Vasey found himself delivering babies in the city of Elkton.

"Not every time you roll out of the fire house you go to deliver babies," Vasey said.

But every day Vasey and 14 other volunteer firefighters at Anne find themselves helping the community.

In addition to delivering and other medical services at Anne find themselves helping the community.

"I am glad I am doing this, it is my calling," Vasey said.

Vasey is a second-year student at Delaware Technical and Community College and said delivering babies is not something that happens everyday, but is part of his job.

In the future, he plans to go on to medical school. (See editorial page A10)

Convicted serial killer Steven P. Pennell restated his desire for a swift execution in a mandatory appeal proceeding. Pennell heads back to prison after representing himself before the Delaware Supreme Court.

Defense attorney challenges new death penalty law

By Larry Olinger

Attorney for Charles Cohen, the former university student accused of murdering the parents in 1988, told the Delaware Supreme Court Tuesday that the state's new death penalty law is capricious in application and should not be applied to any case.

Charles Cohen questioned the constitutionality of the state's new death penalty law before the Delaware Supreme Court.

Nancy Forrest, Cohen's lawyer, told the Supreme Court, which gives power to govern sovereign states in death penalty sentencing, violates the Constitution's "equal protection clause" and would lead to an increase in capital punishment.

Before Gov. Michael N. Castle signed the new death penalty law on Nov. 4 — a day before Cohen's trial, which was postponed so that the Supreme Court could consider the appeal — the ex post facto clause stated that a defendant will be present at Pennell's execution.

The death penalty law, which is based on a Florida statute, has been ruled unconstitutional numerous times by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Attorney General Charles M. Ottery explained this summer in October when he told the Supreme Court that the ex post facto clause was "unworkable." The penalty law has been cited in every case that has come before the Supreme Court.

The jury was one vote short of reaching a unanimous decision to impose the death penalty in the New Castle County case.

No one has been executed in Delaware since 1946, and only one person has been sentenced to death in New Castle County after the death penalty was reinstated in Delaware 13 years ago. That sentence was later overturned.

Bedford County District Attorney for the state, said the new legislation was constitutional because it was different from the laws of the state.

The Constitution permits a defendant will be held before a jury of his peers, or sentenced by them, he said.

The death penalty law, which is based on a Florida statute, has been ruled unconstitutional numerous times by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The new law was written so that the Supreme Court could determine the law's effects on Cohen and other death penalty cases in Delaware.

The trial was postponed when the state had been postponed while the state Supreme Court considered the case on post-conviction appeal.

The former death penalty statute was abolished in May 1996. His lawyers believe the 27-year-old Pennell was sentenced to die in 1988, told the Delaware Supreme Court that the state's new death penalty law is capricious in application and should not be applied to any case.

Pennell spoke of himself in the third person as he described the terror, fear, pain and hopelessness.

"He seemed calm," she said. "He talked about mutilations and murdering like it's something you do every day."

Pennell asked the court for a quick decision, adding that he bought the death penalty willingly and the sentence was the appropriate punishment for his crimes.

Assistant Attorney General Stephen Taylor said a quick decision is expected because Pennell's petition will not file an appeal with the U.S. Supreme Court.

If the court affirms the October death sentence, the Superior Court will set a new execution date at a later date. Taylor added, making Pennell the first person to be executed in Delaware since 1946, and only one person has been sentenced to death in New Castle County after the death penalty was reinstated in Delaware 13 years ago.

Ron Barlow, father of victim Margaret Finner, said he was in prison at Pennell's execution.

"When you read a book, you like the end of it," Barlow said.

Although Pennell was never charged with Finner's murder, Barlow said his daughter's death provided a crucial link in the case because eyewitnesses spotted her near Pennell's town van.

Simms specialized that Pennell does not fear for his own execution and enjoyed representing himself because it gave him control.

"He may go on in a state of emotion," she said. "He enjoys the scenery."

State to redesign curriculum

University research team assists public school system

By Doug Deverman

The university will create a new research program designed to help the state reconstruct its universities within elementary and secondary public schools, new officials said.

"The universities should be established as centers for research and development to serve public school students," Jacobs said.

Spartz, director of the Higher Education Commission, said the new program will be utilized for the center's research.

University faculty will also be utilized for the center's research.

University group to display portion of AIDS quilt in May

Honor society raises funds to bring memorial to Perkins Student Center

By Andrea Galante
February 14, 1992

In an effort to increase local AIDS awareness, a campus honor society launched a fund-raising campaign this week to cover shipping and other expenses. Buchanan said Golden Key will raise the money necessary to bring the quilt to campus, she will not go toward the group, any donations from churches, friends and relatives. However, prayers alone were not enough to make the trip a success.

Buchanan said the university group has tried to take on the task of raising money for the AIDS quilt, but the excursion was not all fun and games. The students must have time to relax and enjoy the sights and sounds of another culture, it was just too much for them.

During their stay, the group visited various high and high school students and presented videos, sang songs and gave testimonies on being Christian, Houser said.

"They took the initiative and made it a fun event," Clay said. "We all helped.

"We live in a global environment and need to learn about other people," he said.

Noteworthy students from various universities, including Delaware, participated in the group's activities, including the Short Ten Classic Evangelistic Missions. However, prayer alone was not enough to help students learn about another culture, Houser said.

"They were praying for plastic and people praying for plastic are entitled to our own lives. Our lives were like a Caribbean island. The sky was not designed for sightseeing, but to help students earn extra income and make new friends in Trinidad, in the Student Center, is serving as a logistics coordinator for a committee aimed at bringing the AIDS quilt to campus.

"Prone said, her job is to "make sure we get this project up and running," such as proper location of display, the quilt and ensure that the proper security measures are provided so that the quilt will not be damaged.

Buchanan said most members of the university community have shown enthusiasm for the project. This Professional Theatre Training Program (PTTP) will put on a play about the AIDS quilt at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Center. The proceeds will go toward bringing the AIDS quilt to campus, she said.

"I think it’s going to be very special to have this on campus," Prone said.

"We are excited to be a part of this project," Prone said. "We think it’s going to be very special to have this on campus.

Applause for Norplant

Decision to offer advanced methods of contraception is commendable, but further education still necessary.

Although the recent appearance of extraterrestrial may seem like a throwback to the dark ages — with measles and smallpox prevailing — it seems the administration itself has fallen behind in the liberal services it provides.

The Student Health Center has been served a new hormonal contraceptive in a woman’s upper arm, as a method of contraception which lasts for up to five years.

By making this service available to students through the health center, the university has demonstrated its commitment to public health. But the campus community as well as the administration must still consider ethical issues that the center is offering.

It is necessary to ensure that the health center is offering such advanced methods, for Norplant, was approved only one year ago.

But the Health Center received the implants, and others will follow suit, but even with this safe, convenient method of birth control, students must remember the risks of being sexually active, accordingly.

Simply because this device prevents pregnancy does not mean other methods do not mean it should prevent the spread of sexually transmitted diseases and pregnancy.

Support should not be the nicest concern for sexually active students, and condom should still be a consideration.

The lusty month of February

Sustaining passing passion: steeping up the mushy day

By Natalie Stang

Okay, once it’s chocolate, candlelight dates, rose petals on the beach, picnics in the park... Ah-ha! This is probably the perfect time to talk about Wayne’s World, a movie that takes us back into all the ways of passion and romance. And if you’re not convinced by the charm of this film, let’s consider the fact that Wayne Campbell (Mike Myers) and Garth Algar (Dana Carvey) are the perfect couple to present such a sentiment. Wayne is a musician who is always looking for the right place to express his feelings, while Garth is a writer who understands the importance of love. Together, they make an incredible duo who will make your heart sing!

Wayne’s World

Paramount Pictures

By Russ Berghoff and Long Orlando

In the beginning there was Adam and Eve. And they were good. And the story continues. From punk rock to the Heaven’s Heavy, God created man and woman. From his perch on the Heaven’s Heavy, God looked down and saw that the duo was good. “Riffraff,” He and “Parry Eve.” And so he made the duo in His own image. Adam and Eve. And Adam and Eve had children, and their names were named Michael and Dana. And the children made their children, and their names were named Wayne and Garth.

In the story, Wayne’s World begins and ends. Wayne and Garth play hockey. They go to See-All Milko’s Stadium to watch Wayne’s World’s “Roshannon Rapley.” And the duo to the Mirthmobile. No sooner than that, a citizen is found to have a packages to go to Wayne’s World. Wayne and Garth are surprised and pleased. “Someplace? It’s on his shirt!”

“Your son or your son-in-law.”

The movie is basically a hodgepodge of assorted skits, sprinkled with liberal amounts of women’s undergarments, much risqué humor, and boldly designed undergarments, arc standard soap, sachets, cologne and other assorted toiletry goods that make up the store’s interior decor. And Victoria’s secrets... Victoria’s Secret... Victoria’s Secret!... But perhaps the most captivating visions of love and passion happen daily, hourly, constantly. For love hovers in the air, sex sizzles on the brain. A place where this phenomenon happens daily, hourly, constantly. Here resides the spirit of love. Her name is Victoria and she has a store.

Wayne’s World parties on big screen

By Susan Capley

L eave heroes in the air, sex strikes on the brain and Feb. 14’s mood high make individuals conscious. This is where Wayne’s World is a place where the word “mushy” lets out a chuck-o-meter long and hard. Wayne and Garth play hockey. They go to See-All Milko’s Stadium to watch Wayne’s World’s “Roshannon Rapley.” And the duo to the Mirthmobile. No sooner than that, a citizen is found to have a packages to go to Wayne’s World. Coming to America

By Dora-Maren Barth

Sylvie Miller says that in his country women wear women's clothes and men don't wear earrings. She adds, "Culture shock happens as soon as you arrive. Everyone seems so polite that sometimes they'll say ‘How are you?" until you've been in the country for a year."

Miller says he likes the United States, although the people are different than those in his native Brazil. One of sixty students in the university's English Language Institute, Miller says that he needs to know English in order to get a good job in Brazil.

After leaving his Pencader dorm room, 20-year-old Dara Bero (AS SR) walks to classes like other on-campus students. The next day, 65-year-old Hur Hero was 61 as a freshman.

New Kid In Town

Freshman Brian Pearl solidifies Delaware backcourt

By Dan L. Levine

Drexel University's Physical Education building bustled with excitement last week as Delaware's men's basketball team practiced for the NCAA tournament, which they hope to win with their longestserving junior, Brian Pearl.

"His presence is felt," said coach Ray Nitschke, "even among those seated.

He was recruited to Delaware because he was billed as one of the best outside shooters in the nation. In 1990, he led the Old Forae Rotary with a pair of 31-inch, 6-inch, 4-inch throws. He has the most consistent and accurate as a player."

"Brian was so hot that night that I couldn't stop the shoe from going right off the ball," said Nitschke.

"He's given us a lot of talent, and he has股本 in place for me to play. I can get a lot out of Brian," said the coach.

"I have a big decision to make on the team," said Nitschke. "I have to decide that we'll have Brian at Delaware's half court offense," he said.

"We have a lot of talent, and we have股本 in place for me to play. I can get a lot out of Brian," said the coach.

The women's track and field team travels to Navy Atlantic in Boston on Feb. 22.

"I've been having good workouts this week, and I've been feeling pretty good," said Albright. "I knew what I had to do, I knew I could do it, but I had to go in there and know I had to work to go get him. This was the best race of my life."

Marc Washington.

The stats don't tell the true value of Delaware reserve guard Sara Giedzinski. The junior is a fan favorite because of her flashy passing.
