University presents budget to state

President David P. Roselle proposes $76.4 million request to governor's committee in Dover

President David P. Roselle

By Michael Regan
Assistant News Editor

DOVER — The growth rate for university appropriations from the state remains far below those of other state-assisted programs, President David P. Roselle said Friday.

During the presentation of the university's 1993-94 budget request to the state, Roselle told the governor's budget committee the university has been treated unfairly compared to other state-assisted programs.

Roselle said the growth rate of state appropriations for the university over the past five years has been 14 percent, while the total growth for higher education in Delaware was 21 percent.

He said the total state budget has grown by 24 percent and therefore the state has neglected the university's financial needs.

University officials requested $76.4 million from the committee as part of the university's $227 million budget for 1993-94.

"We are not asking for special treatment with respect to our state appropriation," Roselle said. "However, we must argue as forcefully as possible for equitable treatment."

He said the proposed reduction of more than $1.6 million in state funds "constitutes a real and substantial threat to the university's capability to deliver the instructional, research and public service activities that have earned it a regional and national reputation for excellence."

Roselle said the reduction would result in the elimination of more staff positions and programs, as well as a tuition increase.

Roselle outlined the components of the budget request, which included increases in scholarship money for Delaware residents. He also asked for a restoration of the funds cut last year.

Michael Ferguson, the state's budget director, said the committee will hold meetings to try to separate funding requests into "those things that are absolutely essential and those things that are discretionary."

Ferguson said the prospect for cuts exists this year, but the cuts won't necessarily be large.

On Dec. 21, the committee will make a final revenue estimate which will be used to build the state's budget, he said.

In January, the budget will be sent to the Joint Finance Committee, comprised of members of the state Senate and General Assembly, where the final draft will be made.

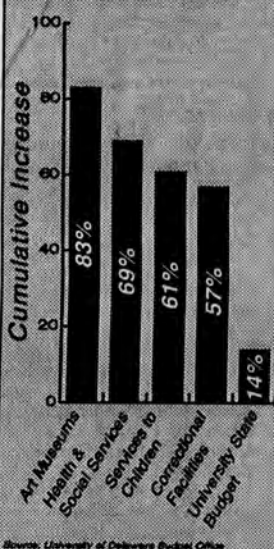

Members of the university's budget office were not optimistic about budget requests being granted in full.

Mark Stahley, associate director of the budget office, said handling proposed reductions from the state is difficult.

"We're already in the hole, before we ask for anything else," Stahley said.

Carol Rylee, university budget director, said because of the state's ailing economy she predicted budget cuts would be inevitable for next year.

Inferno on Chapel St.

Newark office complex engulfed in flames

By Chris Dolmetsch
City News Editor

An investigation is continuing today into a three-alarm fire that roared through a South Chapel Street building early Friday, Newark Fire Marshal Ken Farral said.

The fire, which eight city, state, Maryland and Pennsylvania fire departments fought from 3 to 5:30 a.m., is under investigation by Newark Police and the state fire marshal's office because of its suspicious nature, Farral said.

Smoke filled the air and flames roared out of Del Chapel Place when the blaze was reported at 2:56 a.m., police said. The third alarm was called by Chief Jeff Townley of Actna Hook, Hose and Ladder Company (AHH&L) at 3:12 a.m.

Fourteen fire engines, two rescue units, two ladder trucks, four ambulances and two medical units lined the street as firefighters poured water onto the blaze, which finally was brought under control at 5:28 a.m.

Meanwhile, however, the roof had caved in, the windows had been broken out and little remained of the building save for a charred frame.

Tom Ruger, a partner in Del Chapel Associates (DCA), which owns the building, said it had been rented as office space since the company bought it in 1978, but has not contained any offices since last summer.

Fire fighters battle a blaze early Friday morning at an abandoned building on South Chapel St. and Delaware Ave.

The building has emptied out, Ruger said, and has been up for sale for at least three years.

While DCA has received some offers, he said, they still occupy it.

"We haven't really thought about it," he said. "We're just trying to get the building secure."

Newark Police said the electricity had been turned off in the building and there is nothing inside that seems to have started the blaze.

The state fire marshal's office in Dover has brought in a K-9 unit trained to detect petroleum products in the investigation of possible arson, police said.

Darius Hartwell (AS JR) saw the fire before the police or AHH&L arrived.

"At first, there was just smoke coming out of the windows," he said. "Then, the upstairs started to catch and soon there was fire coming out of them."

"Slowly but surely, it was engulfed."

Aetna firefighters join forces with three other local fire companies to extinguish the blaze in the Del Chapel place building.

Hero stabbed in rescue attempt

Newark man saves university student from sexual assault, suspect escapes

By Ken Nager
City News Editor

A 37-year-old Newark man was stabbed three times after he foiled an attempted rape behind Pathmark in the College Square Shopping Center at 9 p.m. Thursday, Newark Police said.

Ernest Chance Jr., of the 400 block of W. Chestnut Hill, was released from Christiana Hospital Saturday after undergoing surgery on Thursday night, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Lt. Alexander Von Koch of Newark Police gave the following account:

The woman, a 20-year-old part-time university student, left Pathmark and walked around to the back of the building where the suspect was hiding behind a trailer.

The suspect grabbed the woman, threw her to the ground and dragged her toward the trailer.

Chance drove by the store and noticed the assault in progress. He flashed his high beams and honked his horn to scare the attacker away.

The suspect ran toward the Newark Public Library, and Chance jumped out of his car to pursue him.

As Chance attempted to grab the suspect, he was stabbed with a 3-inch pocket knife in the stomach, chest and back.

The suspect escaped, and Chance was transported to Christiana Hospital where he underwent surgery.

Police are investigating whether or not the attempted sexual assault is related to the serial rapist.

Von Koch said, "at this point in time it doesn't look like this attempted assault is related to the serial rapist. "But, we're reviewing all sexual assaults in the area."

Police said the suspect is armed and dangerous and is wanted for attempted murder and attempted unlawful sexual intercourse.

Police described the suspect as a white male in his late 30s with a dark complexion and a full mustache. He has black or brown curly hair, is about 5-feet 10-inches tall and weighs about 190 pounds.

Police said the man was wearing a dark windbreaker, blue pants, a blue hat and should have bruises on his face.

Anyone with information should call Newark Police at 366-7111.

An ambassador should be well-dressed, mannerly and should not play tricks.

Unless you are the "Ambassador of Pool," trick shot champion Paul Gerni.

Wearing a black tuxedo complete with white shirt, black bow tie and red

Mixing the humor of a stand-up comic with the poise of a diplomat, Gerni wowed an audience of about 100 with his trick shots.

For one shot, he promised the audience he would sink six balls in two pockets.

After lining up five balls near one side pocket, he placed the eight ball and cue ball in the center of the table and put the sixth ball near the other side pocket.

Audience members, doubting he could make the shot, were further amazed when Gerni placed a rack

Trespassing arrests in Morris Library link 2 suspects with wallet thefts

By Ken Nager
City News Editor

Two male non-students were arrested Monday Nov. 9 for trespassing in the Morris Library, University Police said.

Capt. Jim Flatley said the arrests come after a three week investigation of wallet thefts in the library.

"There have been over 15 complaints of various property being stolen such as wallets and watches from bookbags in the basement and the second floor of the library," Flatley said.

A university student who asked to remain nameless had her wallet stolen last Sunday when she left the table where she was studying to make a phone call.

Two credit cards and some cash were missing when police recovered the wallet that night, she said.

"My roommate's wallet was stolen the week before," she said, "but I didn't think that it would happen to me."

She said last Monday she noticed two suspicious men walking back and forth in the library.

Flatley said University Police were notified of a theft in the library on Monday night and after investigating, police arrested the two Newark area residents for trespassing.

Flatley said police ran a routine check on the two men and found that one of them was wanted by Wilmington Police.

The same man was identified by a witness from the Sunday night theft.

The witness, who wished to remain nameless said, "my friend's wallet was stolen on Sunday night and I saw a guy that looked very suspicious just walking around."

She said it was obvious that he was up to something because he kept walking back and forth and was just watching people.

Police later found a wallet and a watch in the man's possession, Flatley said.

He was turned over to Wilmington Police and taken to Gander Hill prison then later released on his own accord, Flatley said.

The second man was released after the Monday incident.

Flatley said there was miscommunication between Gander Hill prison and University Police because he was released and not handed over to the university.

Flatley said they are in the process of serving a warrant for the man for misdemeanor theft.

Three university professors took top honors at the International Textiles and Apparel Association Design Competition and Runway Show in Columbus, Ohio on Oct. 23.

The three associate professors from the department of textiles, design and consumer economics won all of the honors in the faculty/professional division of the competition.

M. Jane Matranga won the Best of Show award, M. Jo Kallal won the Outstanding Use of Fabric/Materials award and Karen E. Schaeffer won Most Creative.

Competitive economy needs flexible financial system, speaker says

A former U.S. comptroller of currency told a standing room only audience on Thursday, that we need to build a flexible financial system that can adapt to the economic circumstances of our country.

In a speech titled "Re-regulation or Modernization," James Smith said financial problems resulted from the 1970s, because our banking system undercut the ability to adapt.

"As technology was changing the world, our domestic system began to crack," Smith said.

"We can't have a competitive economy if we can't have a strong, world class financial system," he said.

We continued to use a banking model that was successful in the thirties, he said.

The thrift model, which is the most narrow and constrained of the banking models, was very successful after World War II. However, the model was regulated in the sixties which increased already existing problems.

By 1982, the banking industry had created a serious deficit, and the thrift crisis climaxed because deregulation steps were not taken in a systematic way, he said.

Smith said we need to practice modernization and restructure the supervisory level of the banking industry as well as a system of supervisory governments that is more focused, coordinated and informed.

The information age should utilize telephone industry

The telephone industry has enough "cash flow and resources to allow a rapid development of the information age," said the director of research for the Consumer Federation of America.

Mark Cooper, who has spent 14 years as a consumer advocate, spoke on Friday at Clayton Hall to more than 100 people connected with the direction of Delaware's telecommunication future.

The information age can be accomplished up to 30 times faster than it is and with "capacities three times what they are today within four years," Cooper said.

"Relying on personal computers as the platform for the information age in the 21st century is like creating the world's best public school in the 19th century," he said.

"You needed to teach kids reading, writing and arithmetic to create a good work force.

"But you have to teach them how to do it on a personal computer if you want them to get a good job in the 21st century."

Compared to Europe and Japan,

Cooper said the United States is "dripping in the information age."

The United States uses the telephone three times more and uses cellular twice as much, he said. In the video area, Americans have three times as much access of cable television and spend two times on VCRs per capita.

Europe and Japan "couldn't possibly follow our efficient decentralized market driven path even if they wanted to," Cooper said.

He said they do not have the infrastructure to do so.

Married metalsmiths say they inspire each other in their art

A husband and wife team of metalsmith jewellers displayed their art and critiqued the works of university students in Recitation Hall.

Boris Bally and Roy were featured guest speakers for the metals area of the art department on Saturday.

The artists design abstract jewelry and other sculptures made of materials ranging from gold to street signs.

Their lecture demonstrated how the two artists work together and separately including a slide presentation of samples of their work.

"Working together helps us get motivated," Bally told an audience of about 30.

Phil Cloutier calls for an end to forced busing in Delaware

By Liz Lardaro
Assistant News Editor

Laws requiring students to be bused in order to racially integrate public schools should be removed, Phillip Cloutier said at a meeting of the Newark Jaycees Thursday night.

Cloutier, New Castle County Council president, said a petition to end federal court control of busing is currently being assembled.

However, he said that even if the petition is passed and federal court supervision is repealed, it will not end busing in Delaware because the school districts will still have the power to bus students.

"The school districts themselves will continue to bus students in order to fill up classroom space," he said.

The busing laws were devised by the New Castle County Planning Board and implemented in 1978.

The law requires that Wilmington students are bused into the suburbs for 10 years while suburban students are bused into the city for three years.

Students are currently bused to and from the inner city of Wilmington in order to even racial populations in elementary schools, Cloutier said.

He told an audience of about 20 that he supports the release from court supervised busing.

"All of us have lived in the environment and remember the great trauma of busing," he said. "We need to put an oar in the water and help with the growing interest in the community to deal with chronic problems in the community."

It may be possible for the Christina School District to meet racial integration standards even if it is separated from Wilmington, he said.

The hope for adequate integration centered around Wilmington high schools is a basic issue backdrop for schools in general, he said.

"We educate children in schools to prepare them for life and the workplace," Cloutier said.

The belief behind busing is that the more familiar a child is with racial diversity of the community at large, the better that child's well-being will be, he said.

Cloutier said that at times people who oppose required busing are perceived as racist.

"There should be a racial mix within schools," he said.

The audience told Cloutier of their distress over current busing, which includes a 45 to 60 minute ride.

Jane Donovan, a Newark woman whose child is bused to Bayard Middle School in Wilmington, said she considered enrolling her child in private school or moving because of the busing laws.

"As a parent, I feel powerless in this issue," Donovan said. "Officials should empower the parents or at least help them understand the process."

Cloutier responded by telling the audience to volunteer and get involved.

Susan Jones, whose child is also bused to Wilmington, said she was angry about the required busing.

"No child should have to travel that distance just to meet interracial standards," Jones said.

Clinton may open doors for homosexuals in armed forces

President-elect vows to fulfill campaign promise to lift ban barring gays from serving in the military

By Clare Lyons
Associate News Editor

Two Senators urged President-elect Bill Clinton Monday to act "very cautiously" on the issue of lifting the military ban on homosexuals.

Democrat Sam Nunn, Senate Armed Services Commission Chairman, and Republican Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole both warned Clinton not to remove the ban by executive order without first holding hearings on the issue.

Clinton announced Wednesday he would keep his campaign promise of opening military ranks to gays and lesbians.

In a Veteran's Day speech in his hometown of Hope, Ark., Clinton said: "My position is that we need everybody in America that has got a contribution to make, that's willing to obey the law and work hard and play by the rules."

Clinton said he hopes to change the policy with the cooperation of military personnel in order to determine the best way to lift the ban. Even if Clinton does not receive approval from the military, he can lift the ban by executive order.

■ See Editorial, pg. 6

The regulation which prohibits homosexuality states that the lifestyle is "incompatible with military service."

Sgt. John M. Luncheon of the military science department said the university will still adhere to its current position prohibiting gays and lesbians until it receives orders from the Department of Defense.

"We are the bottom end of the spectrum," Luncheon said. "We obey orders from the top."

He said if and when orders are given, the department will respond to them.

Shari Lynn Goldstein (AS JR), of the Lesbian Gay Bisexual Student Union (LGBSU), said, "I think Clinton will give it a shot, but I don't think the military will cooperate at first."

Goldstein said gays and lesbians

"are people first. These people are lesbian and gay, but it's more than just a bedroom issue."

"They're not in the army for the purpose of having sex."

Discrimination against gays is an extension of the sexism which prevented women from serving in the armed forces, she said.

The regulation was enacted during World War I, at a time when troops were segregated and women only served as nurses and clerical workers.

Fear has also arisen over the fear of the spread of AIDS under military conditions. The military tests for AIDS and dismisses personnel who test positive.

The controversy over the viability of allowing homosexuals to openly serve in the military was heightened by the case of Petty Officer Keith Meinhold, a sailor who was forced to leave the Navy when he admitted that he was gay.

Meinhold was reinstated to the Navy by court order last Tuesday, but the Navy appealed the case Monday.

A National Guard colonel, Margarethe Cammermeyer, was also discharged when she admitted she was a lesbian and is seeking reinstatement.

Clinton also spoke Wednesday about his plans to restructure the military and to provide personnel whose jobs would be eliminated with a smooth transition to civilian life.

British focus on American elections English citizens support Clinton, government maintains allegiance to Bush

By Laura Fasbach
Contributing Editor

LONDON — While Clinton supporters were cheering and those of Bush and Perot were moaning two weeks ago, most Brits were yawning.

But in Oxford, students took Clinton's victory a little more personally because of the time the president-elect spent at Oxford University between 1968-1970.

First-year student Frank Hilderbrandt said during the campaign, it was as if Oxford University was running for the presidency.

"Clinton is Oxford, therefore Oxford is president," Hilderbrandt said.

Cherwell, the Oxford University newspaper, reiterated this message with the bold headline, "Oxford man leads world."

Despite the comradery, some Oxford students said they were not happy with Clinton's politics and the way his campaign was run.

Graduate student Oliver Bond said he fears Clinton will be "a bit isolationist."

In the age of the European Community and the modernization of Eastern Europe, Bond said, "We need the states to be looking outward."

Bond also laughed at the way Oxford was portrayed during the election. Bond said Bush made Oxford students of the late '60s seem like "dope smoking long-haired hippies running away from good old patriotic America."

He explained that the scrutiny Clinton was under for dodging the draft and leading anti-war protests in England caused him to give his

THE REVIEW / Maximilian Gretsch

British concern for the outcome of the American presidential election is reflected by intense media coverage.

bringing a face lift.

"Clinton was pretending to be a southern redneck, forgetting everything he ever learned," Bond said.

Despite a five-hour time difference, British television networks such as the BBC and Radio Station 4 also ran extensive election coverage from midnight to 6 a.m. Wednesday morning.

British reporters had been riding steadily along the U.S. campaign trail all year, but as the election grew closer, coverage of American politics pushed its way from the international section of newspapers to front-page stories. The precedent the U.S. election takes in the British media reflects the country's role as the leading superpower, said Hugh MacDonald, political science professor from the university's London semester program.

"If America sneezes, we all catch the cold," he said.

Clinton's victory may determine whether or not the whole world will be wrapped in blankets the next four years, MacDonald said.

During the Bush administration, foreign policy became the favorite child of the Republican family, he said.

But Clinton's plan to focus his attention on domestic policy will have repercussions around the world.

Shan Hounsel, a 29-year-old law student at College Law School in London said the new administration will "leave the British to deal with Europe."

But those like 26-year-old Danny Kestembaum said they are optimistic about Clinton's victory.

Kestembaum, who has dual citizenship in the United States and the U.K., says, "George Bush's loss is civilized assassination."

The Clinton enthusiast spent the early morning hours of Nov. 4 celebrating the election of a new president at a party in a London hotel. Though he was raised in England, Kestembaum's American pride was conveyed by a Clinton/Gore button on his shirt and by the banner he was holding.

"I'm a junkie," he said, referring to his interest in American politics. However, aside from a personal interest, Kestembaum said: "As a member of the human race, American politics is truly more important. If America picks up, it will help us all."

Although British citizens lean towards Clinton, the English government has a strong allegiance to Bush.

Bush used British campaign managers and the "Trust us, the other party will tax you" concept which Prime Minister John Major's conservative (tories) party used six months ago to re-elect him.

The liberal (labor) party, like Clinton, stressed change. But what failed in England, worked for the U.S. Democratic campaign.

Newark unity group prepares to march Local cultural organization promotes racial awareness at press conference

By Carey McDaniel
Assistant Sports Editor

Plans for a march to express cultural unity in Newark on Nov. 22 moved forward Monday when the Unity Coalition held a press conference at the United Methodist Church on Main Street.

The pro-active group's march will kick off the first "Unity Day," an attempt to eliminate racism, homophobia and anti-semitism for positive action.

"We stand up for people of all colors," she said. "The KKK's march only brought us more publicity. In a sense we needed the Klan to get people to notice what hate crimes actually reside in our community."

Robeck said she expects about 500 to 1,000 people to attend the march.

Chris Eagan (BE JR), a member of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Student Union, said she supports Unity Day because all minorities have to fight for their rights.

"No one is not susceptible to hate crimes," Eagan said. "This cause is so far reaching, that in some way, somehow, everyone is touched by it. And if they're not, they're going to know someone who is."

Assistant Director of Housing and Residence Life Rob Longwell-Grice said since the Unity Coalition was formed, many students have come to him for information about the diversity march.

"Participating in this heightened my sense of urgency and the need to address these problems," Longwell-Grice said. "It's something the students feel very strongly about. There's such a need to get going on this issue, and students are now realizing that."

The Rev. Peter Wells, pastor of the New Ark United Church of Christ, said the coalition is planning educational and advocacy programs, along with more days for unity.

"We are committed to an on-going effort to achieve understanding between groups and individuals," Wells said.

"The presence of hate crimes and groups have reminded us and awakened us to the fact that we have miles to go before we rest. That we must hold on and stay the course."

WXDR changes name, maintains same format

By Mindy Maslynsky
Staff Reporter

After the count went down, WXDR signed off the radio dial at 91.3 FM.

WVUD was ushered in as the new call letters of the university radio station during a reception and count-down party Friday evening.

About 100 guests attended the ceremony and party to celebrate changing the call letters from WXDR.

"experimental Delaware radio," to WVUD, the "voice of the University of Delaware."

From 4 p.m. to 6 p.m., faculty, staff and students enjoyed refreshments in the Gallery of the Perkins Student Center.

At 9 p.m. a count-down began until midnight when WVUD started its first day on the dial at 91.3 with the same program formats as WXDR, said Chuck Tarver, general manager of the radio station.

The radio station, which is funded by radiothons and student center funds, broadcasted live from the East Lounge adjacent to the Gallery.

After station disc jockeys entertained guests with a variety of music, administrators addressed the WVUD audience on the air.

Stuart Sharkey, vice president of Student Life, congratulated the student staff members who "have worked diligently, creatively and successfully to bring this radio station to an unbelievable new height."

Timothy F. Brooks, dean of students, also thanked the radio station for the hands-on broadcasting experience it has provided many students for 16 years.

Brooks also acknowledged the station for being one of the few on-going collaborations between students and Newark community members who also work as disc jockeys at the station.

On behalf of university students, DUSC President Russ Porter (AS SR) thanked WXDR for the "variety of programs which has enhanced the lives of all students."

Chuck Donovan (AS SR), general manager of the radio station, said that WXDR has been Delaware's only source for alternative programming that can be found on radio.

While Donovan called the occasion "bittersweet," Tarver said that WXDR was more than just four letters.

dedicated and energetic people who made the radio," Tarver said. "That will continue even with the new letters."

Tarver said although the letters are changing, no change will occur in the programming format.

WVUD will continue to broadcast a variety of sounds, including jazz, club, classical, international and progressive music.

Tarver said that President David P. Roselle, who was unable to attend the reception, sent his congratulations via an electronic mail message.

Michael Foster, who has been a classical and jazz deejay at the radio station for 11 years, said:

"The most important thing about changing the letters is that it more clearly demonstrates the association the radio station has with the university."

"After all," Foster said, "they have given us the opportunities which has allowed us to be here in the first place."

Jackie Harris (ED SO), one of about 20 students who attended the countdown, listens to the station for several hours each week.

She said the countdown reminded her of New Year's Eve, except "instead of getting new numbers at midnight, there will be new letters. Otherwise everything remains the same."

Trick shot

around the eight ball.

Shooting the cue against the rack, he caused it to tap the five balls into the side pocket, bounce back and knock the sixth ball in.

"The worst thing you can do is be a pool player with a conscience," Gerni said after the trick.

For some tricks, he chose an audience member to make the actual shot.

One of them, Laurie Schlosman (AS FR), hit the cue too hard, missing the shot.

"You don't have to put them into orbit — they are round," Gerni told her.

Gerni said he has more than 600 trick shots in his repertoire, about half of which he invented.

During his visit to Delaware, he said he came up with four or five more, even honoring the state by calling one the "Delaware Drawbridge."

Chris Murphy, assistant director of the Perkins Student Center, said Gerni created and perfected another shot about 6 p.m. — two hours prior to including it in the evening's show.

As a young boy in Indiana, Gerni discovered pool when he wandered away from a Lutheran church meeting.

Happening upon a pool game in the church's recreation room, an older man gave him a chance to shoot.

Gerni missed that first shot, but it was enough to begin an interest which led to a career.

Since his father was pastor of the church, he had a lot of time to practice on the recreation room's table and went on to become Indiana 8-Ball champion at age 16.

However, it wasn't until after Gerni earned a bachelor's degree in economics and marketing and a master's in consumer psychology from Purdue University that he pursued billiards full-time.

After a successful trick-shot exhibition at a mall, he began performing at colleges, malls, billiard rooms and church groups, eventually performing on TV shows such as "The Merv Griffin Show."

Gerni has also taught actors and actresses, such as Peter Falk and Pamela Sue Martin, how to shoot certain shots for their shows.

When he arrived on the set of "Dynasty" to teach Martin, she asked him how long it would take to learn the shots.

"I looked at her and said, 'About two or three months,' Gerni said jokingly.

"She looked at me and said, 'Make it snappy.'"

Despite the jokes, Gerni projects a clean image, contrary to the stereotype most people have of pool players.

He said he does not drink, smoke, take drugs, swear or gamble.

"I'm really a very straight guy," Gerni said.

Straight, but not dull. "He's always on," Murphy said.

Keeping his shots in the family, Gerni's wife helps him to book shows from their Cameron, Mo., home.

Two years ago, their then 5-year-old son took his first shot at one of his dad's exhibitions at a mall in Lancaster, Pa.

"It was pretty touching when he got the balls in," Gerni said.

THE REVIEW/Maximilian Gretsch

Taking aim Trick shot expert Paul Gerni prepares to demonstrate his ability at pool while he visited the university Thursday.

He also travels internationally with his program, citing 17 visits to Sweden since 1977, including performances for the King.

Swedes and Germans in particular are very good at pool, he said. Among his more gratifying visits was one to Hungary, Gerni said.

The people there "just light up," he said, because they have never seen a show like his before.

Gerni spent a lot of time there signing autographs on his promotional pictures — something he spent an hour doing after Thursday's show.

Another day of ambassadorial duty finished.

NASA promotes science education

By Christy McAllister
Staff Reporter

Students explored the final frontier Saturday, during the university's Space Activities Day.

The event, sponsored by the university and NASA, educated students and community members about different science-related careers and topics.

The program, coordinated by Jack R. Vinson, a mechanical engineering professor, and John D. Meakin, chairman of the mechanical engineering department, offered five seminars held at Sharp Lab and Perkins Student Center.

The seminars included talks on astronomy, astrophysics, climate changes and composite materials. About 30 students and community members were also given a tour of the Center for Composite Materials Laboratories located on Academy Street and Delaware Avenue.

Vinson said the program was part of the NASA research and education program.

The program, he said, strives to make space research known to people and to let students know what NASA is doing in aerospace studies.

Sheila Bailey, a researcher at the NASA Lewis Research Center located near Cleveland, Ohio, spoke to students about "Science and Engineering Careers in NASA."

Bailey stressed the importance of math and science in NASA careers, adding that NASA is one of the top 15 employers of engineers and scientists.

"NASA is not to exist just to explore space," she said, "but to encourage people to go into science careers."

Bailey said NASA is very serious about a mandate on education given by Congress when NASA was first established in 1958 and promotes education in several ways.

A Space Grant Consortium, consisting of space and science workshops for children in kindergarten through 12th grade, has been established by NASA in schools nation-wide.

The administration also offers scholarships for graduate and undergraduate students of aeronautics and engineering.

To further science and math education, NASA initiated a program of volunteer speakers who address communities and schools about space and careers in the area of math and science, Bailey said.

NASA also offers summer apprenticeships for graduating high school seniors through graduate students.

Henry L. Shipman, a professor of astronomy and physics, gave a speech on "Space Age Astronomy." Shipman explained that it is necessary to study planets and stars from space using telescopes to pick up details that cannot be seen from earth.

He stressed the important role of students in helping scientists decipher the data they have received from the telescopes.

Student business offers delivery service from local restaurants

By Jennifer Post
Staff Reporter

For the busy student, cooking a meal is a foreign concept and dining out is an inconvenience.

But a new restaurant delivery service partially owned by two university students takes the time and mess out of eating a good meal.

Cuisine Couriers is owned by Bill Haywood (AS JR) and his brother Rob (EG SO), along with their financial backer Steve Kallens. Customers can call the service, which is located in the Meadowood II Shopping Center on Kirkwood Highway, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. to 11 p.m. to order food from various area restaurants.

Once the order is placed, Cuisine Couriers faxes it to the restaurant and picks up the food.

A waiter dressed in an Oxford shirt, tie and apron then delivers it and will offer to place the food directly on the customer's table.

There is a $3 charge for placing an order and an additional $2 charge for an order placed to a second restaurant.

Menus have been sent to homes and businesses in the southwestern suburbs of Wilmington and Newark, and virtually the entire menu from each restaurant is offered, Haywood said.

The restaurants offered include Chi-Chi's, The Crab Trap, Jade Garden and Italian Bistro.

"Chi-Chi's is our major headliner," Haywood said. "We put them over the top to number one in business last week."

Haywood said the idea for restaurant delivery began while he was in high school.

"I was sick and tired of the same old pizza and cheesesteak deliveries, and I thought 'wouldn't it be cool to get something else?'"

Having been a waiter for three years at Steak and Ale's on Kirkwood Highway, Haywood was familiar with the restaurant business.

By creating Cuisine Couriers, he said, "I've taken my strengths and put them together."

Haywood and Kallens met through working together at Delaware Park and last March, they decided to become partners on their first business venture.

Kallens said Haywood is more of a working partner and he is the financial backer.

Kallens, who is also marketing director for Delaware Park, said restaurant delivery as a nationwide concept is only about two years old.

He said he read articles in USA Today and the Wall Street Journal on the topic and began researching it to see if it would be profitable to start his own business.

The business has been a success with the local corporate market. It is perfect for those in offices who do not have enough time to leave work for meals, Haywood said.

"Maryland Bank of North America has had a great response. They order every night," he said.

Cuisine Couriers is trying to promote business to fraternities and sororities for date parties, and university students in general.

"It's perfect for the student who hates to cook," Haywood said. "My roommates and I order out four out of seven nights."

He said on average Cuisine Couriers places 12 to 17 orders a night, but because the business is new it is still building a clientele. Kallens said the service has turned a profit since the second week of its opening in October, and he is optimistic about its future.

Haywood said, "We would like to double business and build up the lunch crowd, and to have a second store serving the New Castle and Bear areas."

Haywood said this is his first "business venture," and although it was difficult to get restaurant managers interested, it has been a "good learning experience."

Haywood personally went to area restaurants to promote the idea and he said most of them were interested.

The Deerpark and Klondike Kate's did not want to be involved with Cuisine Couriers, Haywood said, because they did not want to lose dine-in customers.

Haywood said he is still trying to get both restaurants interested in the service.

Special to THE REVIEW / Karen Klopp Petry
Rebecca Hunter (AS JR) enjoys the art work displayed at the art exhibit in Taylor Gym.

Refining the fine arts in student exhibition

By Karen Klopp Petry
Staff Reporter

Taylor Gym was a hub of activity Friday night at a reception heralding the opening of the second annual art exhibit known as The Refinery.

Sponsored by the art club, Kunstwollen, The Refinery is an undergraduate, student-run exhibition which ran through Sunday.

The exhibit is "unjuried," meaning the students are not told what work they are allowed to put in the show, said Jeff Prybolsky (AS SO), president of Kunstwollen.

Approximately 300 people visited the show Friday, which included everything from oil paintings, etchings, collages, pencil drawings and pottery, to sculptures of various materials.

Dragonfly (Ame) Leathrum (AS SR) exhibited several paintings dealing with overpopulation, racism and vegetarianism.

Leathrum called one of her large paintings, titled "Oil, Enamel and Cow," an "unstupid cow painting." "Red meat is dead meat" was printed on the edge of the image.

Ed Coburn, an area resident who works at Newark Co-Op, studied the painting.

"I really appreciate young ideas," Coburn said. "It's a shame that people often lose many of them as they grow older."

Heather Beckman (AS SR), a fine arts minor, observed a floor display of a large number of clay pots by Michelle Douglas (AS SR), titled "Tread Carefully."

Beckman said there are a limited number of chances students have to display uninjured art.

Ronald Martin, professor of English, said the artwork showed "a whole lot of imagination and real skill." He said he also thought some of the work on display was "real funny."

Prybolsky showed three lithographs done on glass, a printing process using grease and water, titled "Love," and one screen print, titled "Love and Self-Destruction."

Prybolsky's four pieces, framed in rough, unfinished wood, won first place in a mixed competition between graduate and undergraduate students held by the art department in October.

Rayna Blackman (AS SO) displayed two untitled copies of the same photograph of a young woman.

One copy was double exposed with a picture of a tombstone. The result was a print of a woman who appeared to be looking at herself in a "mirror," but actually saw her reflection in a tombstone.

Another display consisted of three pieces of untitled Racu pottery by Carol Harris (AS JR).

Racu pottery is put through a rapid firing process and then put into a reduction chamber of ash and sawdust.

Later in the evening, many students gave poetry readings.

Michael Berkowitz (AS JR) said because he is not a theater major, he cannot take theater courses. He said dramatic poetry readings gave him the chance to act theatrically.

The evening concluded with a performance by local band Zenguerrilla.

Drop the ban!

Homosexuals deserve the honor of serving their country in the armed forces.

The military currently doesn't allow people who declare they are homosexual to join the armed forces.

Homosexuals would create too many problems for heterosexuals in the military, the argument for the ban goes. Troops live and sleep in close quarters. They eat, shower, dress, fight and die together. To include gays in the military would only disrupt morale and lead to distrust between people who are supposed to depend on others to survive.

Homosexuality is also considered a high-risk behavior for the AIDS virus. Is it right to include gays in the military, especially with the nature of combat and combat wounds?

These arguments, of course, are as sound as the Patriot (Miss)ile and as dated as the Flintlock Musket.

Sexual preference should have nothing to do with whether or not a person can effectively serve in the military.

Homophobia is a big problem in this society. Should homosexuals have to worry about whether or not the next person is uncomfortable around them?

If soldiers can deal with the fact that they could get blown up at any minute, they certainly shouldn't have too much problem accepting a gay person's lifestyle.

Homosexuals, no matter what the dried-up Pentagon Prunes think, are not going to join the military so they can oggle their compatriots. Like everyone else, they're going to join the military because they either choose to serve or because they're involuntarily drafted into service.

And as far as AIDS goes, army recruits are thoroughly screened for the virus. Besides, who's to say that a heterosexual soldier couldn't be carrying the HIV virus?

President-elect Bill Clinton promised he would eliminate the ban on gays in the military.

In lifting the ban, he's not only striking a blow for equality, he'll be strengthening the military.

By adding a whole new pool of the military candidates, the military will be swelling their ranks. More troops is never a bad thing in the armed forces.

Already the ban is beginning to fall. Keith Meinhold, a sailor in Navy was forced to leave the military because he openly declared his sexual preference.

He appealed his case. He was reinstated into the Navy's ranks last Tuesday.

It's 1992. Let's do our best to promote equality.

Let's give the ban on homosexuals in the military a dishonorable discharge.

All hail the great and mighty Wizard of UD

Hello, and welcome to UD world. I'm your UD guide, and you can just call me by my first name, Ud.

To start with, please don't pay attention to the stationery you're holding. That has our old phone number listed, and was printed before the reign of the Wizard of UD.

Our updated stationery will come out soon, and will feature our new 831 code to cleverly spell out UD1.

Isn't that cute?

To the right is the UD Perkins Student Center, which houses the UD Scrounge, UD main desk and occasional UD shops.

And downstairs is our pride and joy, WVUD.

Excuse me Ud, but don't you mean WXDR?

Oh no, foolish lad. Our great and holy Wizard of UD has changed the name to WVUD. It took place Friday at Midnight, and is a great event.

Why'd they do that? Wasn't XDR known for a long time?

Hush, little schmuck. When the Great UD speaks, we listen. While he was at the University of Kentucky, he changed the station name to match the university's initials. I'm sure all the station workers are overjoyed.

Well, maybe the Wizard of UD is just on some huge power trip to join hands in eternal bliss with corporate America.

After all, according to a source who wanted to remain anonymous, the wonderful Wizard consulted two station managers from Delaware commercial radio stations, and both said it's a bad idea to change the name without a new station format.

O.K., let's move on to the beautiful new UD sign placed...

Hey, wait! I'd even go so far as to say he lied about the whole thing! After all, he claimed he had nothing to do with the actual change at Delaware, even though he once suggested a new name.

What are you saying, punk?
The Wizard is taking advantage of a student resource for financial gain. From his track record, it's obvious he's the one who initiated the change.

Just ask Lori Horine, a clerk at the University of Kentucky's WUKY, known as WBKY before the Wizard interfered in 1989.

"He wanted it to be more for the university," Horine said. "We were BKY, but he wanted to change it."

WXDR personnel are probably just as thrilled as the WBKY people were.

Disc jockey Steve Kramark: "I'm against it because I'm not used to the other call letters. Besides, [WXDR] is flashier."

Head engineer Rich McGuire: "I wouldn't say people are pissed, but the consensus is they don't want to change the call letters. It's been expected, though."

So why didn't anyone complain when the idea was originally brought up?

Because people have jobs to save. Station manager Chuck Tarver and McGuire are paid by the great Wizard of UD himself.

It's a kind of grind your teeth and bear it b.s. But if you talk to most of the people down there off the record, it's a different scenario.

Oh, come now. It's just the radio station. No, it's not. If you haven't looked around lately, it's a beautiful, new blue and gold UD world out there.

The trucks, the buses, the signs ... everything is emblazoned with UD. It makes you wanna barf.

But what's the problem? What's so bad about changing everything?

The problem is that while you get paid to work here, my tuition pays for all this crap.

Whadaya think, people paint little UD's everywhere for free?

This stuff is expensive, and it costs an arm and a leg to change the old phone numbers so they can now read UD1.

How about putting this much money into getting some better professors or more academic materials?

Making Delaware the magical UD Land from hell does nothing for me. All it does is look good to parents of potential future students who get aroused by the hypnotic blue and gold beauty.

Son, you are way out of line. The Wizard of UD is in charge, and I'm sure they'll be more important and worthy changes ahead.

As the Wizard, it's his job to take charge. Well ma'am, that may be true.

But sometimes the best leader ... is the one who tries not to lead.

Ding. Ding. Ding.

Ladies and gentlemen, the University of Delaware (in conjunction with Roselle Productions Incorporated) is proud to present this one-fall, no-holds-barred, over-the-top, steel-cage match for the Heavyweight Championship of the world.

This bout is sanctioned by the First Amendment of the Constitution and by the World Mudslinging and Muckraking Association.

In this corner, weighing in at a most gravitationally challenged 1034 pounds, wearing the diverse, multicultural shorts, ladies and gentlemen, the university is proud to present to you — the Politically Correct Campus Diversity Unit.

And in this corner, weighing in at a conservative 643 pounds, the Sultans of Sludge, the Offenders of the Faith — The Young Americans for Freedom who publish the new campus newsletter the Delaware Spectator.

(Referee's Instructions.)

Let's have a nice, clean fight. None of this compromising nonsense. There is no middle ground.

Any blow above the belt will lose you a point. If I catch you two speaking about each other in polite terms, I'm gonna come down on you like a hammer on a grape.

In case of a knockdown, go to a neutral corner, get a chair from the front row and beat your opponent while he's down.

I don't want none of that thinking before either of you goes and stereotypes anyone. That crap'll cost you a point too.

ROUND ONE:

Diversity Unit — "The Freedom to be who you are is the cornerstone of a truly multicultural community. Along with that freedom comes the right to express yourself in a way that promotes respect, appreciation, love and support for every member of that community."

The Spectator — "Those who cry 'Diversity!' fail to recognize the diversity and rights of individuals, and only recognize the diversity and rights of groups."

Diversity Unit — "Well, it's obvious where The Spectator stands. They don't agree with us, so they're obviously racist, homophobic and sexist."

The Spectator — "Campus Diversity Unit. Yeah, right. Try Campus Diversity Gestapo."

Diversity Unit — "If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem."

The Spectator — "If the solution is to fall into political correctness, count us out. Besides, the First Amendment gives each and every person the right to not be a part of the solution."

Ding.

ROUND TWO:

The Spectator — "In June, the Supreme Court of United States of America found certain speech codes unconstitutional. They said the government 'cannot regulate "fighting" words because they are unpopular.'"

The Diversity Unit — "And still the minority labors under the oppressive yoke of the majority who hide behind free speech."

The Spectator — "If the government cannot regulate what people say, the university can't tell people what to say."

The Diversity Unit — "Homophobia, racism, sexism and all other forms of cultural oppression diminish the quality of life on campus for all of us."

Ding.

ROUND THREE:

Diversity Unit — "Free Speech can only go so far. If language promotes hate instead of love, then it's wrong."

The Spectator — "If homosexuals ask not to be called homosexuals because they think the word is offensive, should everybody just never use the word, even though it's in the dictionary?"

Diversity Unit — "In the interest of promoting diversity, yes."

The Spectator — "Homosexual. Homosexual. Homosexual."

Diversity Unit — "Homophobia. Homophobia. Homophobia."

Joe Walsh a stewed stiff

We guess Vince DeMuro saw a different Joe Walsh than we did Nov. 12.

The Joe we saw looked like he was a few beers short of a case. He was incoherent, slurring his way through the songs and those "jokes," which were about as amusing as our butts.

The performance was far from flawless. Several times Joe forgot where he was. It was a real thrill when he screwed up his big guitar solo on "Life's Been Good" and just hummed along with that dorky band he picked out of the gutter.

The only good thing Joe did was show up bombed so that he could avoid paying several dollars for a draft of pisswater that the ratrap called the Balloon so kindly provided for us. After seeing the show it became clear to me why we won't be seeing any Eagles reunions in the near future. In fact, Joe looked so strung out, I wouldn't be surprised to see his "good" life come to an end very soon.

It is a real pity that hard-working college students had to spend every last cent they owned to experience such an atrocity.

Abstinence the best weapon against AIDS

Being aware of the facts about AIDS is important. Being aware of AIDS prevention is even more essential. AIDS kills.

I learned this last month in two very real ways. The first was during a bus trip with the LGBSU to Washington D.C. to view the AIDS quilt. Thousands of names, faces, lives. . . dead! Later that month I learned that a friend of mine had lost her grandfather to AIDS received in a blood transfusion in the early 80's. These were people who truly had lost their lives to a disease they were ignorant of and so, awareness programs have become the aim of the educational community. The November 10th editorial column declared to our campus "the only thing that can slow this killer down is awareness . . . awareness that comes in the form of safe-sex."

It's true that safe-sex can greatly reduce the risk of getting AIDS, but that depends upon what you mean by safe sex. To assume that condoms will provide absolute protection against AIDS is to assume that a bullet proof vest makes it impossible to be killed by a gunshot through your forehead.

The holes in condoms are small enough to keep sperm from penetrating, but HIV is 500 times smaller and can fit through the holes in perfectly good condoms. The protection they offer is questionable in light of the stakes.

"AIDS is not spread by sex or blood products so much as it is spread by ignorance." True, but is the editorial's claim that "the only weapons we have against AIDS are blood tests, selective screening, condoms and our own wits" truly eliminating ignorance?

The most obvious weapon against AIDS was completely overlooked; abstaining from high risk behavior, especially IV drug use and multiple sexual partners. A committed relationship of faithfulness, love and trust between a wife and husband makes the danger of AIDS to that couple slim to none.

Being aware of the facts about AIDS is important, being ignorant can get you killed. Weigh out the consequences of your actions before you make your choices, not after.

Biased Bengtson butchers Bon Jovi

Thanks to Russ Bengtson's cutting edge reporting, I now realize that such powers of talent like Megadeth just rule. Forgive me for thinking that after multi-platinum selling albums and Grammy award nominations, Bon Jovi could have a scrap of musical appeal.

I could just write about what a dork Russ is, but it's probably just as easy to fill a page of cheap shots at Bengtson as it is to put down Bon Jovi.

Way to go out on a journalistic limb, buddy. Needless to say, some of us who are Bon Jovi fans do not appreciate such a scathing, biased review.

Movie Review

By Russ Bengtson
 Entertainment Editor

There is nothing more precious than true love. And true love will never die.

Francis Ford Coppola's Bram Stoker's Dracula elevates that particular Victorian novel to heights previously unseen.

Coppola chose an excellent cast, selecting some of the best actors today, and a few unknowns, to bring the novel to life.

Anthony Hopkins enters the Oscar race for best supporting actor with his portrayal of Professor Abraham Van Helsing, an eccentric old doctor who specializes in obscure diseases, including vampirism.

Hopkins' Van Helsing is by far the best role in the movie. He infuses the Dutch doctor with a manic glee that adds brightness to this almost overwhelmingly gothic film. Far removed from last year's Oscar-winning performance as Hannibal Lecter in Silence of the Lambs, Hopkins' Van Helsing is an extremely likeable character whose sometimes tasteless sense of humor belies his intelligence.

Winona Ryder is excellent as well. Her first adult role is a dual one, that of Mina Murray, a young maiden captivated by the ancient prince, and Elisabeta, Dracula's late, lamented 15th-century wife.

Gary Oldman, last seen as Lee Harvey Oswald in Oliver Stone's JFK, takes to the screen in his biggest role to date as the undead Count.

Oldman appears in many guises. He looks somewhat like Amadeus rival Salieri in his "old" phase, a misplaced Beatle circa 1969 in his "young" phase, and a demonic, twisted mutant bat in his "demonic, twisted mutant bat" phase.

Keanu "Ted" Reeves is the fly in this particular ointment. His British accent, although better than Robin Hood's Kevin "Which 'hood do you mean?" Costner, is lacking, and he just doesn't have the passion of the other actors. This spot would have been better filled by an unknown, like the role of Lucy Westenra, Mina's wealthy friend.

Lucy is played by Sadie Frost, marking her first U.S. film appearance. She brings to the screen not only a correct accent, but unmatched passion as a willing victim.

Admittedly, Reeves' problems are not all his fault. His role of Jonathan Harker, a law clerk and the narrator of the story, is just too straight-laced. Mina is smitten with Jonathan, but judging from his character, you'd never know why.

In a scene where he is being simultaneously caressed and fed upon by three luscious female vampires, Reeves should be at the heights of ecstasy and agony. This should be one of the emotional highs of the movie. It isn't.

In a bold move, gravel-voiced bluesman Tom Waits makes a great addition as Renfield, Harker's predecessor, whom Dracula drives buggy, so to speak.

Coppola's stressing of four major elements make Dracula an above-average production:

Lighting — Dracula is dark and gloomy from beginning to end. The windblown, wintry sets — from Lucy's London estate to Count Dracula's decaying Transylvanian edifice — reek of dreariness and foreboding horror.

Music — Complementing the settings perfectly, Wojciech Kilar's haunting melodies drag the already dark tone down even further.

Blood — You got the right one baby ... Not only is it the beverage of choice, but it plays a large role in a frightening number of scenes, but there is very little gratuitous "Friday the 13th" splatter.

Sex — Dracula is really a love story. And, whether it be Reeves with female vampires, or Dracula in his "werewolf-type-creature" phase raping the barely-clad Lucy in a cemetery, or Lucy with no one at all, sex is the dominant motif in this film. Hey, Dracula hasn't had any in 400 years. What do you expect?

Ryder, who up to now has played mostly teenage roles, comes into her own with her portrayal of Mina. Her innocence, and eventual love for the dark prince, all delivered in a flawless British accent, beautifully offset Oldman's amazingly deep Count.

A 15th-century Transylvanian prince, Vlad the Impaler (also played by Oldman) was a member of the Dracula, the order of the Dragon. He was a warrior for Christ, whose faith is lost when his wife commits suicide upon an errant report of his death. In a chilling scene in a castle chapel, he

HTAC's 'Pippin' keeps searching for heart of gold

Pippin
 Written by Roger O. Hirson
 Directed by Colin Murphy
 Harrington Theatre Arts Company
 Nov. 19, 20 & 21. 100 Wolf Hall

By Greg Orlando
 Editorial Editor

As a rule, actors usually don't listen to critics.

But rules are made to be trodden upon. During "Pippin's" opening number, the cast made a dash into the audience, shamelessly pandering to the crowd.

"How are you doing tonight?" a heavily painted girl asked.

"I'm fine," I replied.

"Now get on with it. The show's that way," I said, pointing to the stage.

Get on with it they did. On the strength of some solid acting and excellently choreographed numbers, the Harrington Theatre Arts Company (HTAC) cranked out a truly musical version of "Pippin."

Basically, the play involves itself with young Pippin's quest for spiritual fulfillment.

Neither war nor sex quite does the job for Pippin. He even tries his hand at politics and manages to do worse than ex-President Jimmy "Peanuts" Carter.

Paul Goodman plays Pippin, the first son of Charlemagne, the Holy Roman Emperor. Goodman does a good job with his role and thankfully resists the temptation to overact.

Goodman also does a decent job with his musical numbers, although his voice meandered off-key at times.

Benjamin A. Damiano (AS JR) was excellent as the bumping and grinding leading player. He did it all — sang, danced and emoted his way through the play with considerable grace.

Anyone who can wear pants as tight as Damiano and still breathe, let alone act, deserves a medal.

Throughout the play, he continually wandered about, taking the spotlight when needed and then drifting into the scenery. He was always nearby, ready with a snappy reply or appropriate facial gesture.

Also quite impressive was Denise Fitzsimmons (AS SO) as Berthe, Pippin's 66-year-old grandmother. She took the spotlight during "No Time at All," and in no time at all, she hooked the audience into a rollicking, protracted sing-a-long.

Nicole Norton (AS SO) gave a good performance as Charlemagne's catty wife, Fastrade.

"I'm just a simple housewife and mother," she said at one point, "just like all you wives and mothers out there," following up her monologue with a little writhe.

Meow. Less impressive was the hammy Kevin Abbott (AS SO), who played Lewis, a war-mongering mama's boy who schemes to get Pippin's place in line for the throne.

Put this guy on rye bread with a little cheese and some Grey Poupon and you'd have a good sandwich.

Too numerous to mention, the rest of the cast members, from Charlemagne to the very last face-painted extra, earned every bit of audience applause they got.

The people behind the scenes did a good job of handling the play's technical aspects. From the choreography to the costuming, every little snippet of Pippin was rock solid.

Except for the few scant moments when the cast ventured into the crowd, the production was carried out entirely on the tiny Wolf Hall stage.

To compensate for the lack of space, the cast moved around a lot, leaping and dancing to make the most of the room they'd been given.

A live band positioned in front of the stage on the right-hand side churned out the tunes. This was a nice touch and the music they produced was lively and energetic.

If any fault can be found with "Pippin," it can be in the nature of the genre it occupies. After Pippin kills his father Charlemagne, he bursts into song.

That's a musical for you.

And, of course, like a lot of other musicals, "Pippin" ends on a high note. We should all be as lucky as Pippin. With the love of a good woman who has a severe foot-fetish, he finally finds what he's looking for.

HTAC's "Pippin" is highly amusing and well-executed. If Pippin really wanted to be fulfilled, he would have been in the audience.

A brain-bruising walk on the wild side with The Walkinator

All people use crutches of some sort. Some lean on their boy or girlfriends. Others carry their shelter in a beer bottle. Others take their identity from a social organization, a fraternity or sorority. Not me.

Arnold Schwarzenegger is the running man.

But I'm the walking man. My crutch is semi-permanently attached to my ears. Wherever I go, I tote along my vintage 1991 AIWA Radical Stereo Radio Cassette Player (Model HS-RD7A — Made in a sweatshop in Singapore by 8-year-old slave girls who really know how to slap those circuits together.)

My walkman features the very finest in microtechnology, which means that when I drop it on the floor, not only will the thing vaporize, but the sub-atomic remains will forever haunt the environment.

And I will drop it. In four years of school, I've gone through three walkmen.

Feature Forum

By Greg Orlando

Or maybe I should say the ground has gone through three walkmen.

They just don't make 'em like they used to.

To counter my eternal clumsiness, this latest walkman came with a case that would let me drop the thing in complete safety.

It was made of a new, space-age plastic that resists electrical charge, storm and siege alike.

This case was truly a miracle of modern science.

I lost it within two days.

As far as walkmen go, mine is as good as any. It's got a play button and all the usual extra fixtures: a radio, AM and FM, rewind and fast forward buttons and an atomic disintegrator beam.

(I'm just joking about that last one.) My walkman even has a pitiful equalizer of sorts — three little plastic knobs to adjust the sound. Anyway, the equalizer works a lot better if you have a good imagination.

There's a knob for treble, one for bass and one for SUPERBASS.

I've yet to figure the SUPERBASS out. As far as I can tell, it's a lot like ordinary bass, only a lot more egotistical.

The walkman goes through AA batteries like Cher goes through 16-year-old boys.

It must take a lot of power to run the SUPERBASS.

The volume on my walkman is kept eternally high. Or perhaps, I should say infernally high.

(If they can hear your music in Hell, it's infernally loud.)

Dogs in New Jersey get cerebral hemorrhages when I turn on the old walkman.

The volume is currently on mind-bleed. By the end of the week, I hope to have the thing on lobotomize.

Or crematize.

My walkman is good company for those long walks home.

To amuse myself, I've gotten in the habit of singing along with the music.

Out loud.

Off key.

Whether I have an inkling as to the lyrics or not.

It's an interesting way to pass the time. Especially if someone is around to witness the spectacle.

I subscribe to the Bart Simpson school of music. Simply put, there's no reason to listen to music unless you're sure your parents will hate it.

My walkman has developed a certain affinity for the loud, the noxious and the overenthusiastic.

AC/DC. Motorhead. Deadlyne. Metallica. Aldo Fluvencall and the Kentucky Polka Kings. This is stuff my walkman thrives upon.

If you try to play mellow stuff, the thing will protest, spitting and sputtering until it stops dead as disco.

After an hour's worth of U2 or Jimmy Buffet, I'd estimate my walkman would blow like the five o'clock whistle.

Kaboom.

Professors rock Rodney Room

By Matt Konkle
Assistant Sports Editor

There is the slightest bit of hesitancy in the students' eyes, at first. No one is willing to venture onto the dance floor.

The music blares, almost erupting from the instruments in the Perkins Student Center's Rodney Room.

As the lyrics pour forth, some of the 100 students attending the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures' reception Thursday afternoon gradually move away from the long table of cookies, potato chips and punch.

And then comes the dancing.

To Russian Professor Alexander Lehrman, lead guitarist and chief vocalist of "The Rock and Roll Committee," it's all he needs to see.

"I love it when the audience gets involved like that," Lehrman says. "When they do, it pumps me up and gets me going and I love that."

The "Committee" was formed about six weeks ago by Lehrman and colleague Thomas Lathrop of the foreign languages department.

Lathrop says the idea for the band came about when Lehrman visited him concerning an unrelated matter. "I asked him about a band and we decided to put one together."

Though neither professor knew any colleagues who possessed musical talent, they canvassed the department and came up with Alexander Selimov, a Russian language professor.

With Selimov on bass guitar, Lathrop providing back-up and Lehrman leading the way, the trio began to meet once a week for rehearsal.

At the reception, they play mostly '60s music, which all of them listened to as children.

"As far as I know, we're the first group of our kind here at the university," Lathrop says. "Not even the department knew we were around until we started telling everyone."

A few weeks after the band was created, Dan Voshell (AS SO) was added as a drummer to complete the band's evolution.

"Well, we're a committee, right, and we should have student members around, as well," Lathrop says. "So we added Dan here and he is just a wonderful musician."

Voshell says, "It's just a lot of fun to get out and play in front of people."

The path to performance wasn't easy for the new group, however.

Since they were not well known, no offers materialized in the band's mailbox.

Lehrman, who performed in his native Russia, as well as in Los Angeles, heard about the foreign languages reception and went to Lathrop to see if the band could provide the reception's music.

Lathrop asked the department and was told the band must be approved by the university in order to play.

After receiving permission from the Standards Committee, the department formally asked the group to play.

"And we gladly accepted their invitation," Lathrop says.

Though their lyrics are sometimes drowned out by the volume of their music, the students attending the reception cheer wildly following each song.

"They were just great up there," Lynn Wolfe (AS SR) says. "The music was good and everyone seemed to have fun here today."

Catherine Saltern (AS SR) says she always knew Lehrman was a singer, but never saw him play before.

"That was the neat thing about today," she says. "It gave me a chance to see a different side of my professor."

After the show is over, the applause is deafening in the tiny Rodney Room.

"It is one thing to rehearse in a basement where you can just hear your voice," Lathrop says, "and another to go before a whole audience."

After playing the final song, Lehrman is busy putting away his guitar in one corner of the room.

Drops of sweat ooze down his face as he places the instrument inside a pitch black carrying case.

Pausing for a minute to wipe off his face with a red towel, Lehrman reflects on the afternoon.

He says rock music doesn't change, whether it's in Russia or in the United States. At certain performances, however, he has received different reactions.

"I remember sometimes we played before audiences in Russia that were just dead. Today, it was great to see such feedback from the students."

Disney takes you on a magic carpet ride with 'Aladdin'

Third time's a charm: Latest Disney proves visually stunning and fun

Aladdin
Walt Disney Pictures
Grade: A

By Brandon Jamison
and Glenn Slavin
Assistant Entertainment Editors

"I wish," the Disney executives asked The Genie. "I wish for a film which will rival The Little Mermaid and Beauty and the Beast."

And their seemingly impossible wish was granted.

Thus, Aladdin was born, a true cinematic experience in true Disney fashion.

Everything you'd expect from Disney: violence, adultery, devil worshipping. Sorry, just kidding.

What Aladdin does offer is everything that made Beauty and Mermaid masterpieces. But Aladdin actually exceeds these classics to become what may arguably be the best animated feature ever.

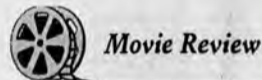

The story is a relatively simple one and very Disneyesque. Two characters meet each other and fall in love despite having too many differences in the way they live (à la Beauty and Mermaid).

This particular scenario involves Aladdin, a young man whose poverty forces him to live on the streets and use his wits to finagle any food or clothing.

He also has the mandatory cute, little, wily sidekick — a little monkey named Abu.

It turns out, surprise, surprise, he is the Chosen One, the only person who can go and retrieve a magical lamp.

The villain, Jafar, is a typical, well, villain.

Movie Review

He wants money and power, and tricks Aladdin to retrieve the lamp for his own greedy and selfish endeavors.

Jafar also has a sidekick of his own, a parrot called Iago who is hysterically voiced by Gilbert Gottfried.

But as it turns out, Aladdin ends up rubbing the lamp himself and out pops The Genie, an animated Robin Williams improvisational stand-up routine.

The Genie, or Williams, rambles on, impersonating such icons as Jack Nicholson, Groucho Marx, Ethel Merman, Rodney Dangerfield and about two zillion other characters.

The scenes involving The Genie are by far the most elaborate and enjoyable. There are a lot of humorous references, like when The Genie makes a crab appear and holding on to his finger is Sebastian from Mermaid.

These subtleties add spice to an already tasty meal.

The animated effects are brilliant, especially scenes involving the Magic Carpet, another case of Disney breathing life into an inanimate object.

The animation will leave you slackjawed with amazement, especially a scene where Aladdin is whisked around on his carpet as a cave collapses around him.

Aladdin's love interest, Princess Jasmine, is pretty hot stuff, all animation aside. She definitely rivals Ariel or Belle for the title of Most Attractive Disney character.

Jasmine refuses to marry a prince, as decreed by the law, and as luck has it, she meets Aladdin. She is swept away by his charm and falls in love with him.

Usual Disney themes are explored but Aladdin is not blatantly preachy.

The need to express individuality, true love, honesty and friendship are incorporated in the plot.

Unlike recent animated features, however, Aladdin does not utilize many songs. There is some singing, mostly done by unlikely vocalist Williams, but the movie as a whole does not rely on the soundtrack.

If there is any flaw in Aladdin, it's the fact that whenever a song starts, the movie loses its feature film aspect and becomes more of a Broadway stage production.

The visuals play the dominant role with the fantastic humor of The Genie running a close second.

There is, of course, the compulsory conflict between good and evil, giving the computer animators a field day depicting magical forces.

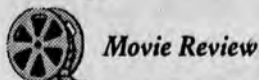

Hopefully, Disney's third animated blockbuster in recent years doesn't mean that they've used up their third and last wish.

But until then, Aladdin is definitely a movie to be seen more than once, because you'll miss a lot of Williams' jokes the first time around.

But mostly, you'll see it again because you'll just want to. It's that good.

'Traces of Red' gives only a trace of plot stability and good acting

Traces of Red
Andy Wolk
Samuel Goldwyn Pictures
Grade: D

Movie Review

By Brandon Jamison
and Glenn Slavin
Assistant Entertainment Editors

Traces of Red is like a sponge.

At first glance it looks like a solid, stable substance.

But what it boils down to is just a bunch of holes connected by a flimsy structure.

Red is another one of those psychological murder mysteries that's supposed to leave you guessing until the end. The only thing you'll find yourself guessing is why you paid money to see it.

James Belushi plays homicide detective Jack Dobson, one of those real cool, laid-back, down-to-earth ... well, the basic Hollywood kind of cop.

Belushi is average in his role and he gives the best performance in the movie.

Not a good omen.

Lorraine Bracco plays Ellen Schofield. All you know about her is she likes to dress in sexy outfits and has no apparent purpose in the movie except to sleep with every guy she meets.

As for Bracco herself, a recent graduate from the Melanie Griffith School of Slow and Bad Acting, she must have taken a few Valiums before arriving to shoot any scenes. She ... re ... cites ... her ... lines ... like ... this ... and does all her talking out of the side of her mouth. Maybe all those Valiums made half of her face numb.

The plot has more holes than Bonnie and Clyde when they were ambushed at the end of their movie.

There is a serial killer running around Palm Beach. He murders voluptuous women and likes to steal their clothes and reapply their lipstick, Yves Saint Laurent Ruby Red.

(Shameless plug?)

The murderer may even be Dobson himself. Boy, what a wacky idea. It's only something you've seen in every other murder flick in the last few years.

Director Andy Wolk, who you've never heard of and probably never will, tries to confuse the audience by making everyone, including Dobson, a suspect.

In fact, it's as if all this confusion is a director's ploy to distract the viewer from a plot more flimsy than a used coffee filter.

Characters appear out of thin air as quickly as they disappear — most likely into the oblivion of the cutting room floor. And character motives are never there to begin with (just like you should never have been in the theater to begin with).

Tony Goldwyn, better known as Patrick Swayze's buddy in Ghost, plays Dobson's partner, Steve Frayne. Goldwyn complements Bracco's bad thespianism with some of his own. What a coincidence that the two end up rolling in the hay.

As a matter of fact, everybody is sleeping with everyone else in this movie. Unfortunately, everyone in the audience will be sleeping, too.

Traces of Red is a very bland and weak effort. When you find out who the murderer is, you can't get what's happened earlier in the movie to gel with the final explanation.

The catchy little slogan for this movie is, "No one is beyond suspicion." The makers of Traces of Red are not only beyond suspicion, they're beyond comprehension.

And you'll be left without a trace of respect for this movie.

The Jeff Healey Band fails to see the light with latest Top-40 oriented album

Feel This
The Jeff Healey Band
Arista Records
Grade: C

By Russ Bengtson
Entertainment Editor

Remember Road House? Yeah, that movie where Patrick Swayze played a professional bouncer, or something, and pretty much beat hell out of everyone.

Remember the band in the movie?

You know, with the blind guitarist? That's The Jeff Healey Band.

What you probably don't remember is the music.

Feel This, their third album, takes Jeff Healey's considerable guitar talent and buries it in Top-40 sludge.

They churn out the same radio-oriented rock as every other band in history. Even the titles, "Lost in Your Eyes" (admittedly written by Tom Petty), "My Kinda Lover" (didn't Billy Squier already do that one?), and "Heart of an Angel" (gag, choke) are overdone.

But hey, you can't judge a song by its title, right? Well, his time you can.

The Jeff Healey Band takes a little from Springsteen, Dire Straits, Steve Winwood, Eddie Money, Eric Clapton and every other two-bit rocker who has existed over the past 20 years.

Musically, they're playing Russian Roulette with an empty gun. No risk. Nearly every song will have you racking your brain to find out where you've heard it before.

You'd expect a little more originality from this band, especially one whose lead singer \ guitarist \ major songwriter, is blind.

Not to be cruel, but the guy can't watch MTV. So why does it sound like all of his songs were stolen from that particular network?

The worst, though, are the second and third songs, "Leave the Light On," and "Baby's Lookin' Hot." Those songs would be bad if the lead singer could see. But since he can't, it's just that much worse.

The first six cuts blend together into a homogenous conglomeration of complete and utter boredom.

To abuse one track in particular, "My Kinda Lover" (the seventh song), a southern rock track, sounds like a .38 Special remake of Hank Williams Jr.'s Monday Night Football piece. Its only redeeming factor is two seconds of Healey guitar at the end.

A guitarist with skills approaching those of the late Stevie Ray Vaughn, Healey is painting himself into a corner with the band. He would be far better off going off on his own.

Track 10, "If You Can't Feel Anything Else" would be a really good song — if it didn't sound like an outtake from the Red Hot Chili Peppers' Blood Sugar Sex Magik.

Healey is a very skillful guitarist, and his diversity on Feel This is ample proof.

But the band has no identity of its own. Until they write something original, they'll keep hitting the Top-10, but no one will remember them.

Maybe it's time for Road House II.

The original Dark Man

vows to rise from the grave to avenge her death.

Rise he does, and Oldman's Dracula hits the town, in this case 1897's London. Looking like an outcast from the Sgt. Pepper's cover shoot (where did he get those cool blue shades?), Oldman uses his Old-World charm to pick up Mina, while her fiancé is being held captive in his decaying castle.

Dracula is a character to fear and pity, to love and loathe. Eternal life is more curse than blessing, his blood lust is usually more pitiful than horrifying.

But, at times, like when he is victimizing the innocent Lucy, you fully appreciate the horror. And, at others, like when in his older phase he licks blood from a razor, you equally recognize the pitiful creature he has become.

Oldman's Dracula is far removed from the now familiar pale-skinned and formally dressed apparition who sleeps in a coffin and crumbles to dust at the first glimmer of sunlight.

Above all, this Dracula is human. He can love, as evidenced by his undying love for Mina and his concern for her salvation. He can live in sunlight, although his powers are diminished. He is real.

The combination of Coppola's direction, the almost perfect cast and the incredible scenery makes for a fantastic movie.

Dracula is a real true-to-life tragedy.

Horror will never be the same.

Bengtson. Levinson. Orlando. Pearlman.

Volleyball takes conference title

Sudden-death win advances Hens to postseason action

By Carey McDaniel
 Assistant Sports Editor

A North Atlantic Conference Championship title passed right before the Delaware women's volleyball team's eyes Saturday when they prepared to meet Drexel University in the tournament finals at the University of Vermont.

When the Dragons swept the match 3-0, that vision of glory left the Hens' sights until next season.

Well, not exactly. When the final match of the tournament was over, it looked like the Hens had lost their first chance at a conference title since 1982, and Drexel was about to walk away with the title and onto the National Invitational Volleyball Tournament at the University of Missouri.

At least, until the Dragons remembered their NAC touney record.

Both teams had landed 2-1 tournament records, which meant the title would be awarded to the winner of a 15-point sudden-death match between the two teams.

"When we came out against Drexel the first time, we got blown out of the water," said senior hitter Sarah Fowler. "We had been playing so well in the tournament, we knew we had to do it then, or that was it."

The Hens rallied their initial tournament force and dominated over the Dragons 15-8 in the tiebreaker.

"I really didn't know what was going to happen when we met Drexel for the second time," said Delaware Coach Barb Viera. "At that point, there was no looking back. We knew we could beat them."

Another factor Viera couldn't predict was her own award of NAC Coach of the Year.

Senior hitter Phoebe Folke said, "When they started to announce it, they said, 'this coach started out the tournament with 13 wins' and we knew it was her. We all just jumped up and started screaming."

Sophomore Kathy Shaw and Fowler each had four kills to help beat the Dragons.

Shaw also earned Tournament Most Valuable Player honors, and joined senior setter Jill Graber on the All-Tournament Team.

Folke had an impressive tournament weekend, as she broke the Delaware record for most blocks for the season, to break Robin Pierce's 1989 team record.

"I didn't even know I was close to the record," Folke said. "To make it to the tournament is so good. We have nothing to lose. We'll just go out there and play hard and see what happens."

Viera's squad will add three more weeks of practice as they prepare for the December 3-6 NIVT. The tournament is for all of the teams who do not have an automatic bid to the NCAAs, but the winners will not go on to the NCAA Tournament.

"Right now we're just so pleased that we made it to the tournament," Viera said. "This year we've learned how to be winners, how to fight back and we deserve that honor [of tournament play]. We just hope to go out there and to play our game and have fun."

Chumps for a day, champs for a season

Delaware shocked by Spiders, 29-21

By Matt Konkle
 Assistant Sports Editor

RICHMOND, VA. — As far as birthdays go, Delaware football Coach Tubby Raymond certainly has celebrated better ones than he did on Richmond Stadium's faded green AstroTurf Saturday.

His 66th was supposed to have been a gala event, where the Hens stomp Richmond and seal an undefeated conference season.

Instead, multiply the 66 times five, and you get about what Spiders' junior quarterback Greg Lilly racked up in passing yards during Richmond's 29-21 win.

Lilly, one of the top-ranked throwing quarterbacks in the nation, notched 374 yards against a Hens' defense which only last week had earned high praise from Raymond.

But even though Richmond stopped Delaware's 12-game conference winning streak, the Hens still won the league title outright.

Delaware can thank Maine for that, as the Black Bears dropped Massachusetts 21-13 Saturday.

"I'm delighted that Maine won today," Raymond said. "A team can't go through a season without getting some breaks and that was one of them."

For the Hens, Maine's win was also just about the only break they received after committing four costly turnovers.

With the Hens leading 14-10 and 3 minutes, 46 seconds left in the first half, senior quarterback Bill Vergantino faded back into the pocket on his own 27-yard line.

Looking downfield for junior split end Dan Cooper, Vergantino unloaded a toss that was picked off by Spiders' cornerback Scott Burton.

THE REVIEW / Maximilian Gretsche

Delaware senior free safety Warren McIntire watches Richmond wide receiver Rod Boothes fly by at the end of a 50-yard touchdown pass in the Spiders' 29-21 bashing of the Hens Saturday. Delaware won the Yankee Conference title outright despite the setback.

One play later, Lilly floated a 50-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Rod Boothes to give Richmond the lead.

"That pattern he ran is called a flag-fly," said Hens' free safety Warren McIntire. "[Boothes] broke off one way and got behind me and that was it."

Midway through the fourth quarter with the Hens trailing 23-21, Vergantino drove Delaware to Richmond's 42-yard line.

Looking to hit Cooper with a pass near the Delaware sideline, Vergantino's pass was snared by Spiders' linebacker Eric Johnson.

Johnson then scampered 49 yards to the Hens' 11-yard line.

From there, tailback Uly Scott dashed up the middle and into the end zone to give Richmond their winning margin.

"We were hoping to drive the ball up field, use up the clock and get the winning score," Raymond said. "It didn't work out that way, and Richmond played very well."

The Hens' inconsistent offense broke on the scoreboard following a late first quarter Spider field goal.

Vergantino slipped off tackle and went up the middle for a 25-yard touchdown run with seven seconds left in the first quarter.

Early in the second, sophomore fullback Daryl Brown bullied his way for a 19-yard score to put the Hens up 14-3.

"You know, with that lead I thought we would be alright," Raymond said. "But Richmond just kept coming on and coming on."

Delaware's 11-point advantage could have been larger as well, but senior halfback Anthony Ventresca

Three miscues erase visions of perfection

RICHMOND, VA. — It's possible the Delaware football team beat Richmond handily Saturday afternoon at University of Richmond Stadium.

Did it happen? Well, actually no. The No. 3 nationally ranked Hens were shocked by the unranked Spiders 29-21 behind 374 yards passing from junior quarterback Greg Lilly and a relentless Spider pass rush.

But in this magical age of modernization, where VCRs are commonplace and video editing is simple, it would take all of a minute to give Delaware (8-2, 7-1 Yankee Conference) an undefeated conference record.

Just eliminate three plays. First rewind to four minutes and 17 seconds left in the first quarter with the Spiders leading 3-0.

O.K. Ed, now turn to the previous play — the one where Delaware quarterback Bill Vergantino throws a 36-yard pass to spread end Dan Cooper.

Got it? Good. Now get ready to erase on this play. First-and-10 at the Richmond 44-yard line, and Vergantino pitches to halfback Anthony Ventresca.

Ventresca, who has struggled out of the backfield all year, finally breaks the big one, charging down the sideline toward the Richmond 6.

NOW ERASE. Instead of cutting out of bounds, Ventresca darts right, where Spiders' cornerback Chris Owens pops the ball from his hands.

Safety Scott Burton recovers, erasing what potentially could have been a 7-3 Delaware lead.

"Turnovers just came at the wrong time," said Vergantino. "Two

7 injuries? That's Zaney

Many athletes say they can't get a break. Zane Collings has never had that kind of problem.

By Jennifer Stevenson

Fifteen minutes before every ice hockey game, Delaware senior defenseman Zane Collings adjusts his $500 knee brace, slips into his skates and prays his knees will last through the next 60 minutes on the ice.

Collings' mother and girlfriend apprehensively peer through the glass as he checks an opposing player against the boards.

After six surgeries on the right knee and one on the left, he knows his career as captain of the Delaware ice hockey club should be over.

"I promised my mom I would stop playing if surgery number eight was necessary," Collings said.

In last Sunday's 6-5 win against the U.S. Naval Academy, he suffered what his doctors said could be the injury that will require the final surgery and end his playing forever.

During the first period of the game, Collings said he heard the unpleasantly familiar popping noise coming from his right knee which usually indicates a problem.

The medial meniscus, the cartilage of the knee which is responsible for his many surgeries, had torn again.

Under the advice of his doctors, he decided not to play in Saturday and Sunday's games against Penn State University and the University of West Virginia.

But Collings is determined to finish the season.

"Zane knows his limits," Hens Coach Shawn Garvin said. "Even though we really needed him out on the ice, he really communicated with the guys from the bench."

Saturday, Collings restlessly stood with the coaches as the rest of the team battled it out against No.3 nationally ranked Penn State in what Garvin considered the toughest game of the season.

"I was really looking forward to playing this game," Collings said, "but I'd much

Harriers endure similar fates

The men's and women's cross country teams wrapped up their individual seasons this weekend in regional tournaments.

Men's coach Jim Fischer saw his squad place 24th out of 31 total teams in the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America meet at Lehigh (Pa.) University Saturday.

Junior's Eric Albright (32:24) and Paul Hansen (32:54) were the top two finishers for the Hens (6-3), placing 82 and 110 overall.

The women harriers (5-2) ended up 17th out of 32 teams in Saturday's NCAA meet at Lehigh.

Seniors Marni Guinta (18:39) and Jill Riblett (18:50) garnered top honors for Delaware, finishing 60th and 66th overall.

fumbled the ball on Richmond's 6-yard line following a 38-yard first-quarter dash.

After Richmond scored on a Michael Henderson 1-yard run, Vergantino hit junior tailback Lanue Johnson on a 58-yard TD toss with 4:11 left in the first half.

That score might have smothered the Spiders, but lying on the Hens' 25-yard line was a little yellow hanky — Johnson was tagged with offensive pass interference.

"I talked with one of the officials about the play," Vergantino said, "and he said there was a lot of jockeying around, which was normal."

"But right before the ball came, Lanue pushed off and got an unfair advantage. The official seemed like he knew what he was talking about."

And then there was Lilly and his receivers to finish Delaware off.

Besides his second quarter 50-yard TD pass, throws of 32 and 28 yards set up the Spiders first score.

"The receivers just had an outstanding day," Lilly said. "[Delaware] just has an outstanding secondary and we just took what they gave us."

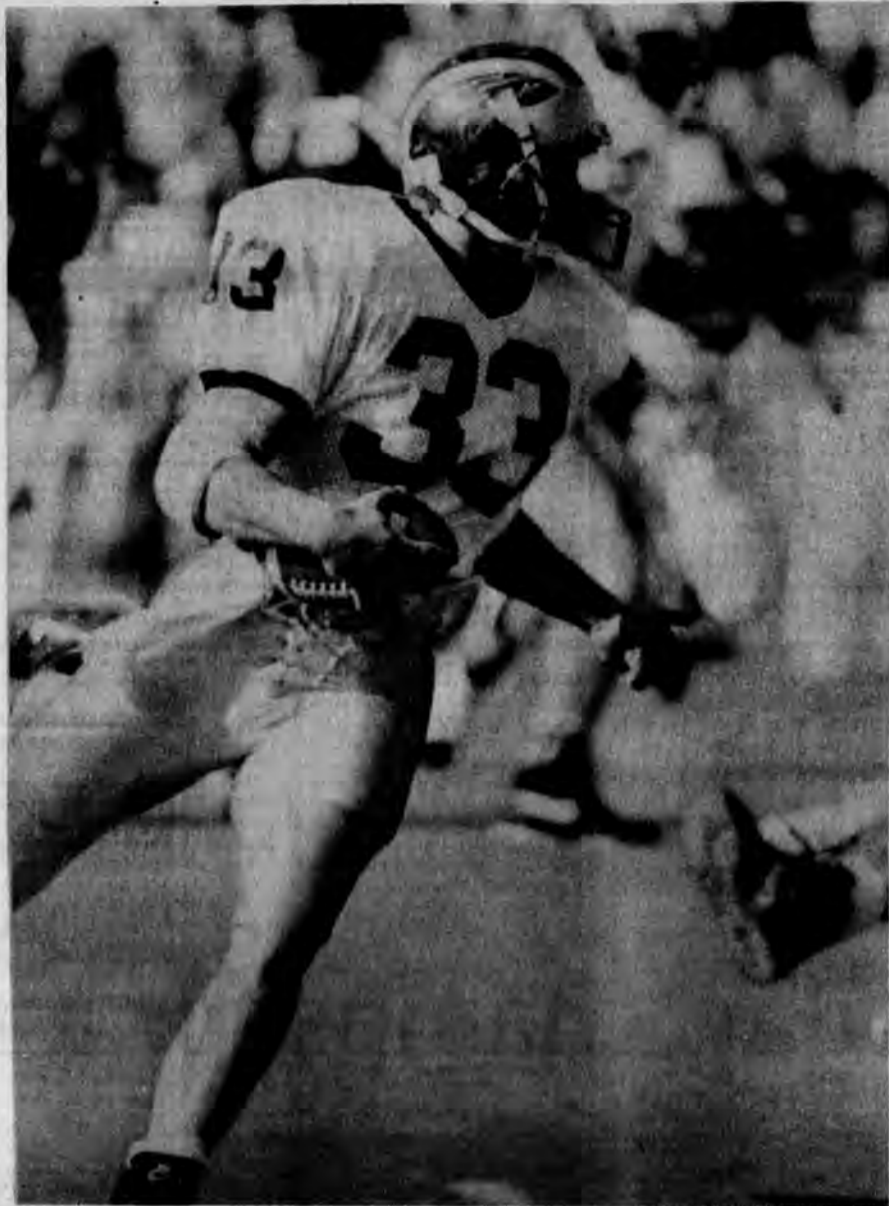

Lilly hit receivers all game in the flat and watched them slip and slide for major yardage.

"I'll tell you, I have great respect for Richmond and their receivers," McIntire said. "That kid Boothes is very good and it was hard to tell that on the films. And Lilly — nothing could stop him out there today."

Lilly's biggest completion came with 2:35 left in the game.

Facing fourth-and-16 from the Hens' 35-yard line, Lilly worked an 18-yard toss to flanker Sterling Brown for a first down, which ended any comeback chances.

"The team really came together and played as a team today," said Spider coach Jim Marshall. "It took something to put a little fire in our eye, and knowing we were playing a great football team did that for us."

Delaware halfback Anthony Ventresca rambles down the sideline seconds before fumbling the ball in the first quarter. The turnover was one of several Hens' errors that led to a 29-21 defeat to the Spiders.

Mistakes kill perfection

you can really look at as touchdowns. We're going in and we fumble, a touchdown pass is called back and we're driving down for the winning touchdown and I throw a pick on third down. It was sloppy."

Now let's zip up to 4:33 left in the second quarter with Richmond (7-3, 5-3 YC) leading 14-10.

The Spiders just scored to gain momentum and hope, and the Hens are facing one of those situations run offenses don't enjoy — second and 15 at their own 42-yard line.

Yo Ed, be careful splicing this one.

Vergantino drops back, jukes to the right and hurls a bomb down the sideline to speedy halfback Lanue Johnson, who jumps over cornerback Brian Lyle, snares the ball and cruises home for the TD.

Keep everything Ed, but fade out the penalty flag.

In a call that was greeted with massive boos by the large Delaware contingency in the stands, Johnson was called for offensive pass interference, nullifying the score and momentum breaker.

"The referee said there was a lot of jockeying," said Hens free safety/co-captain Warren McIntire. "If the pass had not been caught there would have been no penalty, but because Lanue Johnson gained an advantage he had to call it."

At this point, without those two plays Delaware is leading 21-17 and the game is in control.

One more small change is needed, however, to preserve victory.

With Richmond leading 23-21 and 5:33 left in the fourth quarter, the final and most severe correction must be made.

It's third-and-four at the Richmond 42-yard line, and Delaware is driving to take the lead.

Vergantino rolls out to pass, watching split end Dan Cooper scamper near the left sideline.

Suddenly he throws a bullet in Cooper's direction, only it's a shot that badly misses the target.

Richmond linebacker Eric Johnson steps in front of Cooper, snares the ball and darts 49 yards untouched to the end zone for the final blow.

But in the magical world of video, Johnson goes the wrong way, making Delaware coach Tubby Raymond's 66th birthday all the more joyous with the Hens' game-winning score.

Happy birthday, Tubby. Here's your VCR.

Delaware has already clinched a home playoff bid

Swimming looks for youth to make splash

By Ron Porter

Credibility.

The Delaware football team has it. The Delaware basketball team has it. Now the Delaware swimming and diving team want their share.

"We don't get the attention that other sports teams get," said senior women's co-captain Liz Coogan. "Everyone thinks that swimming is boring, but if they gave it a chance they would find that it is really exciting."

You might say, "What's so exciting about watching people go back and forth in a pool?"

Well, does a North Atlantic Conference title evoke some interest?

Judging by the Hens' start so far, it should. Delaware (1-0, 0-0 NAC) travelled to Rider College Saturday to defeat the Broncs in the season opener. The women's meet came down to the last race before the Hens' won 122-121, while the men dominated 140-90.

With such a positive start, it should help to inspire a team that finished second in the conference last year.

Among the Hens' leaders are women's Chris Helondovitch (all strokes) and men's Bill Rash (butterfly) and Mike Brown (backstroke).

"Helondovitch is our silent leader; she cheers both in the water and on the pool deck," said Delaware Coach John Hayman.

With a strong core of upperclassman leading the way after the losses of seniors Andy Palmer and Pat Mead on the men's side and Virginia Broxton on the women's side, the team is armed and ready to battle for the title.

"We have so much talent, if we can perform in the big meets than there is no reason why we can't win the conference," said sophomore Mike Brown.

Along with the established veterans, Hayman is excited by a deep freshman stock.

"Since I've been at Delaware it has been consistent that the freshman would let the upperclassman carry the team," said Hayman, "yet this year the freshman have stepped right up and risen to the challenge."

On the men's team freshman Mike Riccitelli, a distance swimmer, has risen up to the level of the upperclassmen, Hayman said.

The women's team has a multitude of young talent, Heyman said, with versatile freshman Sally Murphy showing her talents in every event.

"The freshman class is unbelievable," said senior co-captain Jen Mattson. "The way they have come in and meshed with other swimmers is great."

But the way they have meshed with the team is not the only thing that the freshmen have to offer.

"They are a really big part of the team," said assistant coach Rob Burgholzer. "Their energy and positive attitude really helps motivate the older swimmers and spark the team."

A spark that will be needed if the Hens hope to defeat arch-rival Drexel and win the NAC.

"This team is unlike any that I've been with," said Burgholzer. "They are so into each others swimming that when one person is swimming, the whole team is swimming."

With an overload of potential, the Hens look not only to win the conference, but to open the eyes of the doubters and gain the most important element.

Credibility.

The Delaware men's and women's swimming and diving teams both opened their seasons with convincing wins over Rider College.

Hockey pays hundreds, but gets little funding

My barber Russ can be a pretty funny guy sometimes.

The two of us always have engaging conversations, and I look forward to opening the heavy glass door which leads to his store.

So it kind of bothered me Sunday when I went to get my hair cut and saw a scowl on Russ' face.

"What's wrong, I asked.

"My youngest kid just signed up to play hockey and the goddamned thing costs $300," he replied bitterly.

Now, being that Russ was holding seven inch scissors close to my head, I decided not to infuriate him at all.

"Man, that's ridiculous," I said, glancing at the gleaming scissors.

Our conversation turned to other topics, but what Russ said was true.

Hockey players from here to Canada have to shell out tons of money in order to play every year.

When I first started to play, my stereo and CD player quickly became casualties — sold just to raise the "ice-time" money.

Combine that with the cost of skates and equipment, and players work a lot of overtime just to play.

It shouldn't be that way, but rink insurance is at an all-time high. After all, hockey is not like ping-pong — people are going to get hit hard, and injuries happen.

But do players on the Delaware ice hockey team have to spend $400 each, just to play?

The answer is no, and it's an answer the university refuses to address by not making the team a varsity sport.

Konk's Krowings
By Matt Konkle

Having club status means the team receives little university funding, and must rent out the Gold Ice Arena for its practices and games.

Granted, ice time is not cheap, but the school could shave off some of that expense.

And it's not like the university doesn't also have something to gain. Nearly 500 people pay admissions at each home game.

No other team at Delaware, with the exception of football and basketball, brings in a large gate.

Instead, players must go through the annual ritual which is known as "ad selling," for programs sold at every home game.

Players must head out to various Newark businesses and plead with them to buy space in the program. The more the player sells, the more money out from the $400.

Unfortunately, this ritual is dominated by the upperclassmen, who just tap the same places which bought from them last year.

The freshman must either hit up good ol' ma for the money, or they just don't play.

Again, varsity status would abolish that ritual.

But even if Delaware refuses to grant that status, they should still chip in more money for the squad, or at least reduce the cost of ice time.

After all, the squad plays in the university rink.

You don't see the football team paying for the use of Delaware Stadium, or the hoop squad shelling out money for the Convo.

Rather, the university foots the bill through alumni contributions.

But that money should find its way to hockey as well.

A few small cuts here, and a few there by the university can make a huge difference. Why not?

Delaware should stop making the players scrounge around for money to play the sport they love.

The team is good too, 6-1 entering into this coming weekend.

They would be even better if they could stop turning away good players who couldn't pay the funds.

Imagine if Hens' football quarterback Bill Vergantino wasn't able to play because he didn't have enough money.

Wasted talent. It is a shame. It doesn't need to be that way.

All the university needs to do is slide the hockey team more funding. While they are at it, maybe they could also fund the Midget Cougars.

Then my barber's kid wouldn't have to spend so much money as well, and I wouldn't have to worry the next time I get a hair cut.

Matt Konkle is an assistant sports editor of The Review.

rather finish out the season by playing Penn State when they come here in January than finishing out the season with another injury this weekend."

In addition to Collings' absence, the Hens were missing center Bernie Parent who was out with bronchitis.

The Hens (6-1) blemished their 5-0 record Saturday with a 8-3 loss to Penn State.

"We weren't expected to win this game," Garvin said, "but I know we surprised Penn State by playing so well. We never quit."

Garvin said he and the other coaches were concerned the Delaware skaters would be too intimidated to hold up against Penn State's quick offense.

Junior defenseman Joe Keller admitted that Penn State was a much quicker team, but said the Hens would have had a better chance of winning with the size of Parent and Collings.

"We need to be in our own rink with our own fans," Keller said. "If everyone stays healthy, we'll be ready when they come down here."

After shaking off the loss, the team traveled to West Virginia Sunday to play in an outdoor rink.

Keller led the team to a 5-3 win with two goals and one assist, while junior goalie Ken Rothman started his first game of the season by stopping 37 shots.

Collings said the team now has to look ahead to defeating West Chester University in December, since Delaware has only managed to tie them in previous games.

After playing Penn State, he said, "we'll be ready for just about anything."

ENGINEERS/SCIENTISTS
ENTRY-LEVEL INTERN POSITIONS

The U.S. Army Toxic and Hazardous Materials Agency (USATHAMA), a Field Operating Agency of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, is currently accepting resumes for six entry level intern positions. USATHAMA is the Army's central program manager for environmental restoration and compliance and the Technical Center for Expertise for hazardous, toxic and radiological waste technology demonstration and transfer. The available positions are open to individuals who will receive degrees in the areas of physical science, engineering, environmental science, chemistry and geology by December 1992; and offer career progression through intensive training and rotational assignments. Starting salaries range from $17,686 to $28,476 for scientists, and $22,996 to $35,046 on the engineering scale. Resumes should be mailed to the following address by 24 November 1992: U.S. Army Aberdeen Proving Ground Support Activity, ATTN: STEAP-CP (Ms. Lora Mioduski), Bldg. 305, Aberdeen Proving Ground, MD 21005-5001. For more information, contact Ms. Mioduski at (410) 278-8967. Aberdeen Proving Ground is an EQUAL OPPORTUNITY EMPLOYER. MINORITIES AND WOMEN ARE ENCOURAGED TO APPLY.

"C'MON AND TAKE A FREE RIDE! YEAH, YEAH, YEAH, YEAH."

ALL DURING NOVEMBER, EVERY ROUTE 5 RIDE IS ON US.

IT'S MUSIC TO YOUR EARS... AND YOUR WALLET

DART announces a deal just for University of Delaware students that is so big, it'll not only rock you ... but it'll get you rolling, too.

To introduce our new Route 5 service, we're giving you unlimited free riding for the entire month of November. Sorry, offer expires December 1, 1992.

See how simple it is to go dart it! directly from class to the Christiana Mall.

Or from doing homework to heading home. Try it for a month ... you won't even have to write home for money ... because it's FREE.

YOUR STUDENT ID IS YOUR TICKET TO RIDE

How does it work? Just take out your University of Delaware student ID card anytime you need a lift. Show it to the DART driver when boarding the bus, then take a seat.

DART will handle all the hassles of getting you where you're going. We'll fight the traffic and parking, which may free you up to figure out your calculus or read your analysis of Albanian Archaeology in the early ages.

YOU'LL GET AROUND, 'ROUND, 'ROUND, 'ROUND

Your free November service on the Route 5 bus will take you here, there and everywhere we go. Just look at some of the places we stop:

- Newark - Elkton Road
- Newark - S. College Ave.
- The Christiana Mall
- The Christiana Hospital
- MBNA
- Ogetown Road
- University of Delaware
- Del. Tech. Stanton Campus

CATCH THE LAST TRAIN TO CLARKSVILLE

DART can also get you on the right track for home. The Route 5 travels to Wilmington and drops you off just three blocks from the Wilmington AMTRAK station.

(Call the DARTLINE at 655-3381 for schedule information). You won't have to bug your friends to drive you there after your last class on Friday or get up early on Monday to meet you.

LIFE IN THE FAST LANE

Gotta'getthereinahurry, right? So hop on the Route 5 bus and do a quick one-two onto the Route 16. The 16 has daily express buses to and from Wilmington during the week. Your Route 5 ride is still free during November, but you'll have to pay for the Route 16.

You can also take the Route 5 to the Route 6, which can take you shopping along the Kirkwood Highway. The Route 5 is still free for November only, but you'll have to spring for the Route 6 ride.

IF LIFE IS A HIGHWAY, YOU'RE 'GONNA RIDE IT AND SAVE MONEY

When November is history, you'll enjoy DART's economics. All U. of D. students will continue to receive a big 30% discount off the cash fare with every ticket. Tickets are available at the Student Info Center at the Perkins Student Center.

So spend November riding and learning the Route 5 bus without spending a penny. Then, when you come back after break, just hop on the bus, Gus.
