Introduction: The charge on 16 Dec to E.E. [per] [J?] Warner for a pair of shoes for a "Negro boy" may indicate that Franklin owned a slave in 1735. If so, his name may have been Joseph, for early in the year (24 March), under the account with Isaac Cosin, there is the charge “By Pair Breeches for Jos., 1.0.0.” Joseph, however, may have been Joseph Rose, an apprentice with Franklin, whose father, Acquila Rose, died in 1723. For the later appearance of a “Joseph” who worked for Franklin, see the introduction to 1742; and for a slave who was definitely working for Franklin, see the introduction to 1745.

Beginning in Nov, 1735, many accounts come from the Shop Book, which Deborah kept. Of course it contains numerous examples of her spelling--the delight and despair of everyone who has worked with the accounts. One example is her entry on 29 Dec: "The Weiver that Wefed the bedtick, Dr. for An inglish Expositor." After a second, it makes good sense, the weaver who weaved the bedtick bought an English expositor on credit. Next, who was the weaver? Perhaps John Clifton, John Richey, or Robert Sheperd.

George House, the Quaker shoemaker and original member of the Union Fire Company, who brought Franklin and Meredith their first customer in 1728, bought ads on credit this year. The pacifist Quaker James Morris, the treasurer of the Library Company and a member of the Union Fire Company; the local merchant Joseph Wharton; and John Peter Zenger, whom Andrew Hamilton later defended in a famous freedom of the press case, also turn up. Thomas Hopkinson’s account discloses that the father of the composer and Signer, Francis Hopkinson, played a musical instrument and that his library included at least one sizeable "Tune book" (5 Aug). The accounts prove that BF rather than Andrew Bradford printed Jacob Taylor’s almanac for 1736 (no copy is extant--but Miller 117 attributed it to BF on “inferential” evidence); the brushmaker John Wilkinson paid BF for printing his advertisement in Taylor’s almanac (2 Nov).

Though Franklin had begun collecting rags for the papermakers in 1734, it was not until 7 July 1735 that rags start turning up regularly in the accounts. By that time he and the paper makers were carrying on a symbiotic relationship, and BF’s accounts with paper makers come to be a dominant aspect of the accounts beginning in 1736.

Imprints. Minor printed items not in C. William Miller’s bibliography include Franklin’s charge of one pound and fifteen shillings to Caspar Wistar "for printing of the Dutch Proposals," 21 July (perhaps a short pamphlet), and for printing penal bills, 2 Oct (no amount listed). BF published ten imprints at his own risk. The most successful seem to have been the vade-mecum The Gentleman’s Pocket Farrier (Miller 98; often called the “Jockey Book” in the accounts), which began selling on 7 April; Franklin’s various defenses of the Rev. Samuel Hemphill (Miller 101, 102, 105, and 106), which appeared from July to Nov; and James Logan’s translation of Cato’s Moral Distichs (Miller 99), which came out in Dec.

BF printed the Delaware paper money law (10 May), and the more rewarding job of the paper money itself on 9 April, for £50, plus £11.10.0 for the paper. He also printed a currency act for New Jersey (Miller 109). For the Pennsylvania Assembly, he recorded payments for the Jan and March sessions of the Votes, and on 19 Sept, the assembly noted its payment of £25.12.6, for all the items (presumably Miller 89-95) printed for the 1734-35 session. The Jan and Aug entries for the assembly of 1735-36 (Miller 113) seem to be recorded without date at the year-end under “Province of Pennsylvania.”

The Shop. The variety of goods available in Franklin’s shop increased in 1735. He sold "Cambrick" (31 Jan), bonnetboards (3 May), and "black Wax" (28 May). Chocolate (by the pound or in bars) first appeared on 8 May, but became a common item in 1737. Franklin’s shop catered to specific professions, as indicated by his sale of gold and silver leaf. In July he sold "a Book of Silver" to William Morgan, who advertised in PG #204, 26 Oct 1732, that a man who "turned wood" (a joiner) had lately moved to his shop. In the same month, Franklin sold "6 Books Leaf Gold" to the artist Gustavus Hesselius (1682-1755; the son John [1728-78] was still too young), who advertised in PG #615, 25 Sept 1740, as a painter who also did "Gilding of all sorts" and "Writing in Gold or Colour." Mrs. Lloyd made an interesting purchase of Franklin: "400 small Bills [labels, Miller A94] for Bottles" (18 March). Among the items taken in trade were "a Teapot" (21 Oct); credit for "chais hier" [chaise hire] from "the Coachmaker" (18 Nov); a "Pair Breeches" (1734/5); "2 Pair Snuffers" (1734/5), and from David Humphries; "a Cask and Syder" (probably 1735). It’s puzzling at first that on 24 Nov, Thomas Meredith, evidently the brother of Hugh and son of the Chester County Assemblyman Simon Meredith, purchased "half a Dictionary"; but it probably means that he paid cash for half the purchase.
