Appendix 2. Possible addenda to or revisions of Miller through 1747

Appendix 2 contains the following four possible addenda to or revisions of Miller, arranged chronologically within each year: A. Additions to Miller - not advertisements. B. Additions to Miller - advertisements. C. Revisions of or possible additions to Miller – not advertisements. D. Possible additions to Miller - advertisements.

A number of entries in the accounts appear to be possible addenda to or revisions of entries listed by C. William Miller. Most of these entries are job printings and would have been listed in Miller's pp. 457-474, which detailed 545 entries from Franklin's accounts. These ephemera include separately printed advertisements (e.g., in 1730, nos. A22 and A29 in Miller p. 458).

The advertisements present a special problem, for most advertisements in the accounts appeared in the newspaper and cost three shillings. Many, however, are clearly separately printed items, sometimes indicated by the number of advertisements printed or, more commonly, by the notation "single." Other advertisements give no indication that they may have been separately printed, but they cost more than the normal newspaper advertisement. In addition to the three shilling price, the accounts often give the issue number of the Pennsylvania Gazette in which the advertisement appeared. If the advertisement cost five shillings or more, however, and was not specified as being printed in the newspaper, it may have been printed as a separate advertisement. Indeed, brief separately printed advertisements, like Miller A22, could cost less than three shillings. Most advertisements that cost three shillings or less were newspaper advertisements. Those that cost five shillings or more (and some long newspaper advertisements did) may well have been separately printed. I therefore divide the advertisements into two lists: those that were separately printed and those that may have been.

Again, the accounts list only credit items, not those paid for in cash. Job printings cost comparatively little and most would have been paid for upon delivery. In his "Apology for Printers," 10 June 1731 (P 1:199), Franklin wrote that he had printed above 1,000 advertisements. Miller lists 2 separate ones and there are evidently 7 more. Franklin may be exaggerating, and he may be including newspaper advertisements in the number, but the context suggests that he is speaking of separate advertisements. The numbers suggest that only one in one hundred advertisements were done on credit and further suggests that fewer than one in one thousand ephemera printings survive.

I confess I feel some reluctance to publish this appendix, for I have depended on Miller’s great bibliography throughout the years from 1728 through 1747 (and beyond). My additions and revisions are insignificant in comparison to Miller’s achievement. Every later careful scholar who makes good use of an earlier scholar’s work will usually find some revisions or additions to it. I tell myself that I should publish the additions and revisions that I make, if only because I expect later scholars to publish additions and revisions to my own work. Alas, that errors and omissions will occur.
