Preface

As the director of the University of Delaware’s Institute for Public Administration (IPA), I am pleased to present an Inventory of Small Business Assistance Programs in Delaware. Funded by the Division of Small Business within Delaware’s Department of State, this report lists and characterizes small business support services provided to Delaware businesses by public and nonprofit organizations. The inventory reflects best available information gathered by IPA from July through September 2017. Together with Delaware’s Small Business Landscape—available on the IPA publications webpage (www.sppa.udel.edu/ipa/resources/publications) this report contributes to a comprehensive snapshot of small business conditions in Delaware and an assessment of policy and program opportunities the state could pursue as part of future small business and economic development efforts.

IPA is committed to supporting Delaware’s economic development efforts. I hope this report serves as a useful resource to enhance small business development efforts in Delaware.

Introduction and Overview of Findings

In order to provide the Division of Small Business with information on support resources available across the state, the University of Delaware’s Institute for Public Administration (IPA) conducted an inventory of services and programs that can be utilized by small businesses in Delaware. The inventory included programs and services offered by state, federal, and local government entities, as well as those offered by non-governmental organizations. IPA’s research team classified each program according to the type of assistance provided. While all programs included in the inventory are available to small businesses, many are not designed exclusively for them. The inventory reflects best available information gathered by the IPA team from July through September 2017. Further context for this effort may be found in the separate report, Delaware’s Small Business Landscape, which is available on the IPA publications webpage (www.sppa.udel.edu/ipa/resources/publications).

The following section reviews the methodology used to inventory and classify support services and programs. A general overview of findings is provided, along with a more detailed analysis of programs and services provided by the following organization types: (1) state government, (2) federal government, (3) local government, and (4) non-governmental.

This introductory section concludes by summarizing the following key issues identified during the inventory process:

- Programs and services targeting women, minorities, and veterans are limited in number and focus primarily on business planning and the pursuit of public procurement contracts.
- There are many incentives and programs available to Delaware businesses. However, the lack of a single source to acquire complete information on programs may reduce awareness of and accessibility to these services.
- No organization serves as a central coordinator that can direct businesses to the service providers who can best address their needs.
- Many programs have specific purposes that may limit the number of businesses eligible for assistance.
- There are a limited number of incentive and support programs designed to address the needs of early stage entrepreneurs and build the capacity of small businesses to expand.

The remaining sections of this report list, classify, and briefly describe small business assistance programs administered by state, federal, and local government entities and non-governmental organizations.
Methodology

IPA’s project team reviewed service provider websites, examined relevant program documents, and conducted informal interviews with key stakeholders who provide support services to small businesses in Delaware. Support services and programs were classified into the following four categories: Business Planning, Capital Acquisition and Site Selection, Operations, and Market Development.

Business Planning
This category includes programs and services that assist individuals with establishing a business through activities such as identifying supply and demand for products and services, developing a business plan, and navigating the licensing process. Generally, programs in this category provide individuals with access to one-on-one technical assistance, educational courses, or virtual self-guided toolkits.

Capital Acquisition and Site Selection
This category includes programs and services that provide support to companies through loans and grants, assistance with capital acquisition and site selection, and access to incubation sites. In general, programs in this category are financial incentives with specific application guidelines or incubation centers that provide early-stage companies with a physical location and on-site technical assistance and coaching.

Operations
This category includes programs and services that provide small businesses with direct and indirect support for operational activities such as marketing, regulatory compliance, accounting, management, process improvement, networking/advocacy, and employee training. Programs in this category generally include hands-on technical assistance, networking forums, advocacy platforms, and offices within governmental entities that assist small business owners in navigating regulatory requirements.

Market Development
This category includes programs and services that assist small businesses in expanding their market and customer base. In general, programs in this category help business owners with tasks such as expanding into the online marketplace, navigating government procurement processes, and broadening their presence into foreign markets.

In addition to classifying programs into these four categories, the project team identified whether programs engaged in targeted assistance, with targeted assistance defined as programs and services aimed at specific classes of businesses based on their industry, ownership type, stage of development, or location.
Overview of Findings

The IPA project team identified 73 service providers offering approximately 275 specific programs and services available to small businesses across Delaware.¹ Most of the programs offered were included in the capital formation category (150), followed by operations (101), market development (33), and business planning (27). State and local government entities primarily provide programs related to capital formation (90), while non-governmental entities focus on programming related to operations (72) and business planning (17). Federal government entities, while primarily providing programs and services related to capital formation (40), also offer a fair number of programs in the operations (12), market development (10), and business planning (7) categories. In summary, government entities generally support small businesses through financial incentives, loans, and grants, while non-governmental entities tend to provide technical assistance related to business planning and operations. Table 1 details the total number of programs and services broken down by service provider classification and program type.

¹ Note: These findings reflect research completed in September 2017.
State Government Entities

During the inventory process, 11 state government entities were identified as service providers to small businesses—the Departments of Agriculture, Finance, Labor, Natural Resources and Environmental Control, State, and Transportation; the Divisions of Libraries and Small Business; the Offices of State Planning Coordination and Management and Budget; and the State Housing Authority. These entities provided 65 identified support services and programs, with the majority related to capital formation and site selection (51) and the remainder focused on operations (11), market development (6), and business planning (1). Of these 65 programs, 6 were advertised as targeted exclusively at small businesses.

At the state level, capital formation and site selection programs are generally incentive-based programs focused on providing support to a specific industry or type of business, such as the Specialty Crop Block Grant Program, the Delaware Green Energy Fund’s Research and Development Program, and the State Small Business Credit Initiative. Programs like the Heavy-Duty Vehicle Rebate Program and the Delaware Rural Irrigation Program (DRIP) Revolving Loan Fund are used to subsidize certain capital purchases. Others, such as the Work Opportunity Tax Credit and Veterans’ Opportunity Credit, serve as hiring incentives.

State-administered operations programs are primarily related to job training and regulatory assistance. Example programs include the Department of Labor’s job-site training program and assistance for business owners with regulatory compliance through the Department of Natural Resources and Environmental Control’s Small Business Assistance Program.

Market development programs are primarily aimed at assisting businesses with navigating state procurement procedures, with the only identified business-planning-related program offered by the Delaware Division of Libraries.

Identified programming for women (3), minorities (3), and veterans (3) is limited in quantity and primarily related to helping these groups expand their businesses into government contracting. There is also a hiring incentive for companies that employ veterans.
Approximately 25 programs are aimed at supporting specific industries and types of companies such as:

- Agriculture
- Construction
- Early stage
- Energy
- Finance
- Freight
- Industrial
- Innovation/Technology
- Research and development
- Telecommunications

In general, these programs are either financial or hiring incentives provided to accelerate the development of these industries.

Other primary areas of targeted assistance include:

- ADA compliance and accessibility
- Energy efficiency
- Hiring incentives
- Infrastructure and environmental remediation
- Job training
- Targeted geographic area development and historic preservation

Of these areas, hiring incentives (11), targeted geographic area development and historic preservation (6), and job training (5) were the most common.

Non-Governmental Organizations

IPA identified 49 non-governmental organizations as service providers to small businesses in Delaware. These entities provide 106 identified support programs and services, with the majority of these related to operations (72), followed by capital formation and site selection (20), business planning (17), and market development (16). Of these 106 programs, 23 were advertised as targeted exclusively for small businesses.

Identified programs designed specifically for minorities (7) and women (2) were limited, and none aimed at veterans were found. Additional targeted assistance programs include those to assist low-income individuals (2) and ones that support the hiring and training of individuals with intellectual disabilities (3). In general, targeted support for women and minorities is offered through service providers or programs that focus exclusively on a particular demographic. For example, the First State Community Loan Fund houses a Women’s Business Center, the Hispanic Business Development Program, and multiple partnerships with community development corporations in the City of Wilmington. Programs offered by these entities are generally all inclusive and focus on helping individuals with business planning, the pursuit of capital, and efforts to enhance business operations.

Operations-related programs offered by non-governmental organizations tended to focus on advocacy and networking. Examples include the many services provided by chambers of commerce and business interest groups located across the state. Programs in this category also focus on providing individuals with technical assistance in areas related to general business operations. The Small Business Development Center and Delaware Center for Enterprise Development, for example, provide multiple programs of this nature.

Programs related to capital formation and site selection are generally related to incubation sites such as the Delaware Technology Park or loans and grants provided by institutions such as First State Community Loan Fund and First State Innovation. University- and community-based organizations are the primary service providers for programs related to business planning and market development.

Approximately 27 programs are offered to support specific industries and types of business such as:

- Agriculture
- Bioscience
- Chemistry
- Early stage
- Energy
- Food service
- Manufacturing
- Mid-size businesses
- Nonprofit small businesses
- Research and development
- Retail
- Technology and innovation
Other primary areas of targeted assistance include:

- Cybersecurity training
- Disaster relief
- Job training
- Networking and advocacy
- Targeted geographic area development
- Youth development

Networking and advocacy (27) and targeted geographic area development (4) were the most numerous targeted assistance programs.

Federal Government Entities

Three federal government entities were identified as providers of support programs and services to Delaware small businesses. Through the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the U.S. Economic Development Administration, and the U.S. Small Business Administration, federal government entities provide 58 identified small business assistance programs in Delaware. The majority of this programming is related to capital formation and site selection (40), followed by operations (12), market development (10), and business planning (7). Of these 58 programs, 18 were targeted to support small businesses specifically.

Federal capital formation and site selection programs focus on giving small businesses access to financial resources. As with state programs, some of these financial resources are targeted toward specific industries, types of business, and geographic areas.

Federal programs related to operations include mentoring programs and hands-on technical assistance to help business owners improve general operations and manage their businesses more effectively. Market development programs such as the Emerging Markets Program and Trade Adjustment Assistance for Firms assist businesses with entering export markets. In addition, the 8(a) Business Development Program assists women and minority business owners in gaining access to federal procurement and service contracts. Business planning programs are provided primarily by the Small Business Administration, with some targeted to assist specific groups such as women, minorities, veterans, and Americans over 50 years old.

Identified programming designed specifically for women (6), minorities (4), and veterans is related to offering technical assistance, financial support, and guidance regarding public procurement procedures and contracts.
Approximately 27 programs are offered to support specific industries and types of businesses such as:

- Agriculture
- Construction
- Early stage
- Energy
- Manufacturing
- Research and development
- Seasonal
- Technology and innovation
- Telecommunications

Other primary areas of targeted assistance include:

- Targeted geographic area development
- Networking and advocacy
- Entrepreneurs 50 and older

Of these areas, targeted geographic area development (7) and networking and advocacy (5) were the most common types.

Local Government Entities

IPA identified 11 local government entities that provide distinct programs and services to support small businesses in Delaware. These entities provide 46 identified programs, with the majority being related to capital formation and site selection (39), followed by operations (5), business planning (1), and market development (1). Of these 46 programs, 7 are focused specifically on small businesses. One program could not be classified due to insufficient information. The research team anticipates that more than 46 programs are offered by local governments in Delaware, although details on them were not readily discoverable.

Capital formation and site selection programs offered by local government entities in Delaware primarily relate to tax and fee exemptions, although some are tied to hiring incentives or promoting development in a specific area. A few local government entities offer technical assistance programs to assist small businesses with general operations. Only the City of Wilmington offers identified business planning and market development programs.

The City of Wilmington offered the only identified programming targeted for women (1) and minorities (1). These programs aim to increase the number of women- and minority-owned businesses awarded contracts and procurement bids with the city.
Six programs are offered to support specific industries and types of businesses such as:

- Commercial
- Early stage
- Manufacturing

Other primary areas of targeted assistance include:

- Energy efficiency
- Hiring incentives
- Job training
- Networking and advocacy
- Targeted geographic area development and historic preservation
- Vacant properties and environmentally distressed areas

Among these areas of assistance, targeted geographic area development and historic preservation (7) and hiring incentives (3) programs were the most common.

Key Issues

Several key issues were identified through the program review and informal interview process:

1. Programs and services targeting women, minorities, and veterans are limited in number and focus primarily on business planning and the pursuit of public procurement contracts. While available programs are beneficial to these groups, interviewees expressed the need to do more to ensure equitable opportunities for small business ownership, particularly in the most disadvantaged regions of the state.

2. There are many incentives and programs available to Delaware businesses. However, the lack of a single source to acquire complete information on programs may reduce awareness of and accessibility to these services. Navigating websites to acquire information on available incentives and locate service providers with relevant programs can be a daunting process for existing or potential small business owners. Streamlining access to information is a critical requirement for ensuring small business owners can and will receive necessary support.

3. No organization serves as a central coordinator that can direct businesses to the service providers who can best address their needs. This issue has created a situation where many service providers must devote significant time and resources to conducting intake and delivering basic support services—efforts that can detract from a focus on the areas in which these organizations have the greatest expertise.
4. Many programs have specific purposes that can greatly limit the number of businesses eligible for assistance. Programs are generally established to address a particular need that is relevant at the time of establishment. However, once many of these programs are created they remain active, even after the acute issue they were created to address has been resolved.

5. There are a limited number of incentive and support programs designed to address the needs of early stage entrepreneurs and build the capacity of small businesses to expand. Equity and credit are not readily available for many small businesses because they are too risky to finance, have not established relationships with potential funders or a strong credit history, and often lack assets to use as collateral. Interviewees identified a lack of bridge loans, early stage financing, and gap financing as significant issues in Delaware. These funding sources are critical for small businesses since they help them to become established and grow, make payroll, and continue to operate as business expansions and enhancements are implemented.
State Government Entities

Delaware Department of Agriculture

The Department of Agriculture (DOA) is an executive agency headed by a cabinet secretary appointed by the governor. The DOA is responsible for sustaining and promoting agriculture industries throughout the state. It provides services to support agriculture, promote best agricultural practices, encourage increased agricultural production, protect the environment, grow business, and ensure safe and sustainable practices. Agriculture is one of the primary industries in the state and makes up a significant portion of the state’s economy. The DOA is responsible for ensuring that agriculture continues to be an economic driver in the state and that Delaware’s potential for economic prosperity through the agriculture industry continues to grow and expand.

U.S. Economic Development Administration (EDA)

Overseen by the U.S. Department of Commerce, the Economic Development Administration (EDA) focuses exclusively on economic development efforts, especially in economically distressed areas in the United States. With six regional offices that span the country, EDA specializes in working alongside local economic development officials to make grant investments and create programs that support innovation and entrepreneurship. EDA provides businesses with the tools and resources they need to compete in both domestic and international markets.
