Mr. Messersmith comes out of the mess with about all the credit that belongs to the American side of the case. Mr. Stimson still does not see anything wrong with the way the professor was grilled, nor does he seem to feel the necessity of safeguarding against similar lack of common sense in dealing with distinguished persons who seek to visit this country. He appears to be willing to let the incident ride as being nothing out of the ordinary, but just what people like Einstein must anticipate under our immigration laws.
