President Truman said that Ambassador Messersmith has finished his mission successfully and will return to the United States. President Truman said he was not recalling Messersmith and had not received his resignation. The President explained that Messersmith went to Buenos Aires with the understanding that he would return to the United States when he had completed his mission. He said that this was now done. He added that the United States was now on friendly terms with Argentina.