History of the Class of 1913

Did you ever notice the custom prevalent among class historians of beginning their work (?) with "On such and such a day we," the illustrious, or famous, or brilliant, etc., class of 19—? "We have—(We use "we" in an editorial sense, not referring to the entire class, for who ever heard of Blades noticing anything except the woman?)"—Then they go on with a long discourse on the size of the class, its great athletic ability, and "last but not least" its "drag" with the faculty. Now the class of 1913 does not hold the record for size; it has not turned out more Varsity men than any other class that has ever entered Old Delaware; and "last but not least" the faculty is not going into raptures of joy, pride, or anything else over it.

But there are certain things which it is necessary for every class history to contain. One of them is the names of the class officers during each of the four years. To facilitate matters we will put the officers of all four years in a tabulated form so that any who is not particularly interested can skip with ease. (Sounds like a text book; but "we've studied the text."

FRESHMAN YEAR

Like every other class we had our rushes; we won in our Freshman Year and lost in our Sophomore Year. Then we had our other annual class clashes, all of which we lost except the Indoor Meet. Of course we were very happy when we won this; so was everyone else but the Sophomores. The affair was soothing to their "swollen craniums;" but it failed to remove the swelling. However they are "getting theirs" now; they have been graduated.

We almost forgot to mention our Freshman posters, and they were really good. We are justly proud of them. We also like to remember our Freshman banquet. We had a good time—for Freshmen. Of course our banquet was like every other banquet which the Freshmen are in the habit (custom is too weak to use here) of giving. But let us offer just a word of advice concerning the banquet to the future Freshmen: Have it when there is a decent (don't take this word literally) show at the Garrick.

At the end of our Freshman Year we lost, through death, Gordon Haley. This death was a great loss to both the College and the class. Three long years have passed since then, but Gordon Haley is not forgotten. Can better tribute than this be offered?

During our Sophomore Year we did as every other Sophomore Class. Nobody loves a Sophomore. Perhaps the faculty knows this, since it has arranged to make it the easiest year throughout the college course.

But the Junior Year! Not only did our studies assume monstrous proportions but our social responsibility almost overwhelmed us. It is no "cinch" to handle a Junior Prom. and a Junior Recitation Schedule at the same time. We couldn't just find the exact relation of a dance committee to "Wright's Mechanics" although it was very evident that the "electricals" could very well use a little "Timbie" (notwithstanding that Timbie had not yet made his debut) in wiring the "Gym." We got over the Prom. all right (just as we did the measles, you know) and were beginning to breathe freely again when someone mentioned the Farewell Hop. So we had to get down to work on this; and we are not over it yet,—financially speaking.

And now we are Seniors. It sounds big, but we feel just the same. It is usually said that Seniors think that they "know it all." Why, we will even admit that our professors know more than we do, that is all except one—but we won't mention any names.

Do not think because we have not mentioned it that our class has not athletes. It has "D" men on every team. Also do not think that it lacks student ability. The class began with forty-three members and, after picking up a few here and there, has lost all but twenty-two men. (I say men, although "Becky" and Johnnie Mullin cannot yet vote; but they are both better than the average man.) When it comes time for the big affair in the Oratory next June we are all going to be right up on the stage with arms outstretched ready to welcome home those long-desired sheepskins.
With this thought of Commencement we must stop. We can only hope, Dear Old Delaware, that, although

"The days of yore will come no more;
Through our future years
The thought of you, so good, so true
Will fill our eyes with tears.
The thought of you, so good, so true
Will fill our eyes with tears."
```
