November 18, 1939.

Dear Raymond:

I have your letter of November 15 and we look forward to seeing you any time after the 25th that you care to come along. You must not have any reserves about staying with us at least at the outset of your visit because my wife and I will be delighted to have you and, as I told you, we have plenty of room and you can be absolutely free. We know each other well enough so that you will realize that you will not in any way interfere with my own habits and, if after some days at the house you prefer to go on to the Mayflower, there is no reason why you should not do so. The one thing that I do want to repeat again is that much as we want to see you here and look forward to that pleasure, it is desirable that you not come until you really feel fit and completely rested. This is just a word at the beginning of a morning which will unfortunately be a very full one so with very good wishes from us both,

Cordially and sincerely,

Raymond H. Geist, Esquire,.
