College Bills Pass House Unanimously

Expect Action By Senate Today Or Tomorrow; Full Budget Allowed By Assembly

WOMEN'S COLLEGE BILL PASSES HOUSE TODAY

The bill appropriating funds for the erection of a new dormitory, kitchen and dining-room at the Women's College passed the House of Representatives at Dover this afternoon at 3.15. Thirty-three members voted for its passage. Two were absent. There was no dissenting vote.

A representative of the Board of Trustees of the University was asked to speak on the measure from the floor of the House this afternoon prior to the vote.

The budget of the University of Delaware for the years 1925-26, totalling $152,000 each year, was unanimously approved by the House of Representatives at Dover on Monday, along with the scores of other items in the General Appropriations Bill. Final approval by the Senate is awaited, and may come at any time.

$37,000 for the College Farm and Experiment Station; $5,000 for the Chair of History at the University; $12,000 for Summer School teachers, and $12,000 for poultry husbandry and entomology, are other items which were also approved. In addition several increases for various instructional departments were included in the approved budget of the University proper.

Pleasure was openly expressed yesterday by officials of the University at the action of the House. For the first time in some years, the University's request for funds has been allowed to stand. It was also the first time in recent years that the House unanimously approved the General Appropriations bill in its entirety. Following the vote, Representative Hastings of Newark praised the work of the joint budget committee, headed by Representative Drexler.

2 1/2 Millions Granted

Totals for the ensuing two years in the general appropriation bill, if passed by the Senate, call for the expenditure of over $2,500,000 of State funds. (Continued on Page 7.)

Returns For Eighth Year At Local Church

Rev. Frank Herson Creates Unusual Record; Was Slated To Go To Crisfield, Md.

BOOSTER FOR NEW BUILDING

Creating a record almost without parallel in Wilmington Methodist Conference circles, Rev. Frank Herson was assigned to the Newark M. E. Church for the eighth consecutive year Monday of this week.

Rev. Herson, one of the most popular ministers the local church has ever had, for a time was believed lost to his flock here. It is understood that he was slated to go to Crisfield, Maryland, to take charge of a much larger congregation, but at the last minute the program was changed and he returns to Newark.

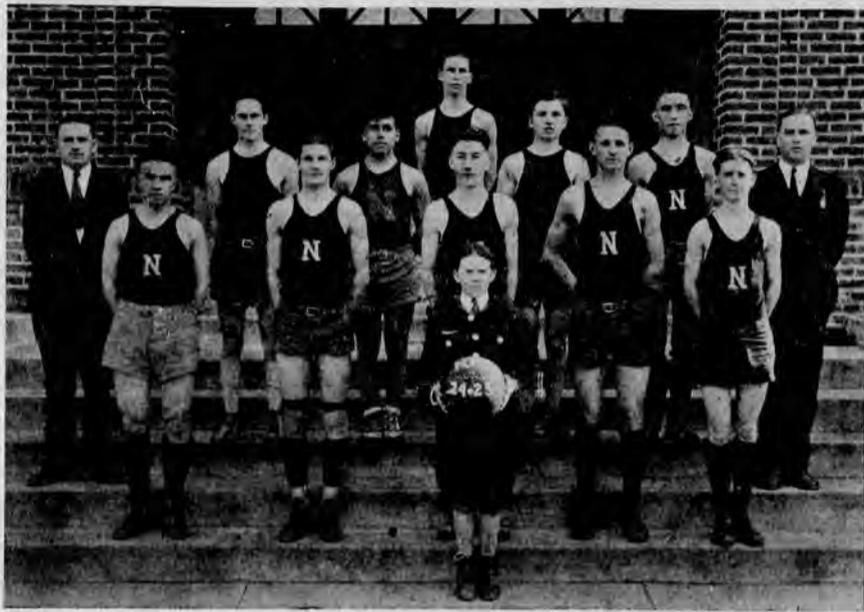

Several important changes throughout the Conference are included in the complete list published today in THE POST. While the district superintendents remain at their posts, several nearby churches will see new faces within a few weeks.

Rev. Herson's big reason for remaining in Newark, it is believed, is the fact that he is actively leading the movement for a new Church building, already planned to occupy the lot recently purchased on Academy street, extended. The coming year is expected to see important progress in this direction. That the present accommodations are far inadequate for the growing membership of the church is admitted by everyone.

The following are the pastoral assignments, the changes being denoted by the asterisks (*).

Frank E. Mote Held On Embezzling Charge

Local Insurance Agent Released Yesterday on $1,000 Bail For Hearing April 13th.

Charged by three insurance companies, of which he was local agent, with embezzling sums totalling between $600 and $700 over a period of several months, Frank E. Mote, of this town, was yesterday held under $1,000 bail for a hearing before Magistrate Barnet Gluckman, in Wilmington, scheduled for April 13th next, at 2.30 p. m.

Following the swearing out of the warrant before the Wilmington Magistrate, Constable Hinson, of that city, came to Newark in quest of the accused. In response to a call from Chief Lewis, Mote came into town from his home near Milford Cross Roads and gave himself up. Bail in the case was furnished by George W. Rhodes.

Suspected for Some Time

According to information gathered this week, the arrest of Mote had been expected for some days. At various times during the past two months, representatives of his insurance companies have visited Newark, and conferred with him regarding alleged discrepancies in his accounts. Several additional complaints lodged by local policy-holders, following cancellation of their policies, are said to have led up to the arrest of Mote.

Further action on the part of the insurance companies will be determined at the hearing on April 13th. Mote is actively connected with lodges, the national guard unit and athletic activities in the town, and is well known throughout the community. His alleged embezzlements comes as a great shock to his friends.

Four File Names For Council Berths

Three candidates for Town Council seats and one for Mayor have filed their names up until today. The annual election takes place on April 13th next, with President and three Councilmen to be chosen. Those who have already filed are:

For Mayor, Eben B. Frazer; for Councilmen: western district, E. Clifford Wilson; middle district, R. Gilpin Buckingham; eastern district, Arthur L. Beales.

The last day for filing of candidacies for Town Council is set for April 4th.

Newark High Champs Pile Up 405 Points To Opponents 289 On Court

With the season at an end; and another D. I. A. A. basketball championship safely tucked away somewhere in the recesses of the old Academy building, time has permitted Coach Nunn to gather together figures to show the strength of his team during the recent campaign.

In the fifteen-game season, Newark scored a total of 405 points to their opponents' 289. The point average per game stands at 27 even, 12 victories and three defeats, including the awarded New Castle game, constitute the team's record. Throughout the season with but one exception, the High School passers kept up a rather even scoring attack.

The complete record for the season follows:

Newark	Season Record	Opponents

Chamber Of Commerce Committees Are Named

First Meeting of New Directors Held Last Night; Plan Members' Dinner Soon; Vote Community Tree

The first meeting of the newly elected board of directors of the Newark Chamber of Commerce was held last night, with President J. K. Johnston presiding.

Standing committees for the new year were appointed as follows:

- Civic: George E. Dutton, George W. Griffin, Rev. H. E. Hallman.
- Industrial: Louis Handloff, James C. Hastings, Fred Ritz.
- Agricultural: Harry W. Davis, J. Irvin Dayett, William P. Wollaston.
- Educational: Dr. Walter Hüllihen, T. R. Dantz, Robert S. Gallaher.
- Membership: Eben B. Frazer, R. W. Heim, John S. Shaw, D. A. McClintock, E. B. Crooks.
- Mercantile: Meyer Pilnick, Isaac Marritz, I. Newton Sheaffer, Edward L. Richards.

Business Transacted

It was decided to hold a dinner meeting for members only on the last Thursday night in April. At this time there will be no stated speaker, and members will be cordially invited by the Chamber to bring up any problem or issue which they may be interested in. The Board seemed heartily in favor of the idea, and a committee consisting of A. G. Wilkinson, T. R. Dantz, and R. S. Gallaher, was appointed to arrange for the affair.

The Board voted to erect a permanent Community Christmas tree upon the Academy lawn subject to the approval of the Academy trustees. Warren Singles and Henry Mote were appointed to act for the Chamber in this matter.

Ten shares of Building and Loan stock, five from each local association, were ordered subscribed by the Board last night. It is the purpose to use this fund for an investment, looking toward future town development.

Further important business consisted of authorizing a letter to Council, recommending a complete re-numbering of houses in town, and discussion on the suggestion to establish a Village Green or park in Newark.

Everett C. Johnson, Warren Singles and George W. Rhodes were named as a committee to procure the centennial of townspeople in this line.

School Board's Decision Not To Move Primary School Stirs Parents

THE PETITION

TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF NEWARK, DELAWARE:

We, the undersigned, do hereby respectfully call your attention to the following petition:

INASMUCH AS you decided at a recent meeting to make no transfer of primary students to the new school building until next September, which means that they will have to remain in their present unsanitary quarters for another three months, or one-third of the school year, and

INASMUCH AS the new school building is complete and ready for occupancy where said pupils may have sanitary quarters immediately, and

INASMUCH AS the sanitary conditions of the old building are so terribly unhealthy, due to odors from the cellar toilets, which permeate the air in class rooms, cloak rooms, and halls, making the place unclean, unsanitary unhealthy and almost unlivable for either student or teacher;

THEREFORE, we as parents of said primary students do hereby petition that you re-consider your decision in the matter and ask that you transfer all primary students to the new school building at as early a date as possible, feeling as we do that you have at heart the health and welfare of all these children, and we do hereinafter sign ourselves in favor of this arrangement. March 20, 1925.

GET ASSESSMENT LIST

Copy Being Made For Local Committee's Consideration

A copy of the Newark assessment list is being made for the use of the Revision Committee appointed recently at a town meeting here. As soon as finished, the copy will be placed in the hands of the committee, and revisions begun.

John K. Johnston, who received the County Board's permission to use the list, said today: "The Board showed a fine spirit of cooperation. If their present stand is carried out in the final adjustment of the assessments here, following their revision by the local committee, Newark taxpayers may be assured of fair and equitable treatment."

HASTINGS HEADS BATTERY

Gets Commission As Commander Of Battery E

James C. Hastings, who was recently promoted to captaincy in the National Guard a year ago, but left unassigned, has been designated commander of Battery E, anti-aircraft, stationed here, and has assumed his duties, vice Captain John Davis, who was transferred to the state supply company. Captain Hastings will also have entire charge of the Armory here.

SURPRISE THEIR FRIENDS

Miss McCully and C. B. Dean Quietly Married In Elkton

Miss Anna Almeda McCully, young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard McCully of East Main street, and Clarence B. Dean, local grocer and meat merchant, were quietly married by the Rev. W. R. Moon in Elkton last Wednesday night. The news of the wedding leaked out a day or so later. The event took the many friends of both the bride and groom completely by surprise. Mr. and Mrs. Dean will shortly take up their residence in Newark.

KIWANIS IS COMING

The annual outing of the Wilmington Kiwanis Club will take place at the University on Wednesday, April 22nd, according to Kiwanian A. G. Wilkinson, who is actively at the head of local arrangements for the visit.

Petition, With 88 Signers, Submitted Following Meeting

Parents' Charge of Unsanitary Conditions in Old Building Denied by Board; Two Inspections Made

Prompted by the petition herewith published and signed by 88 parents, together with widely different opinions expressed by the School Board, the past week has brought about a stubborn issue in Newark school affairs.

The discussion dates directly back to the meeting of the Board held 10 days ago, at which time it was decided not to move the Primary School into the new building on Academy Street.

Immediately upon receipt of this news, Harry L. Bonham, a parent with a daughter in the old building on Main Street, drafted the petition herewith published, secured the signatures of 63 per cent of the parents concerned, and submitted same to the Board, through Harrison Gray, a member.

In sifting down the case throughout its various bewildering phases, The Post has taken an absolutely neutral stand, and presents its findings as follows:

THE FACTS

1. The Petitioners' case:

That the Primary building now is entirely unfit for continued use, due to unsanitary conditions of the toilets, and the general uncleanness of the entire building. That the Board has so far given no adequate reason why the lower grades cannot be moved into the new building; that not only parents, but teachers have complained of the situation which exists in the old building.

2. The Board's Case:

That the sanitary conditions at the old school are "not materially" worse than they have been in the past; that failure of the contractor to complete the new school has caused the Board to keep all the Primary grades in place, instead of moving a part of them, and leaving the balance in the old rooms; that the unfinished conditions of the walks and grounds about the new building make it extremely inconvenient for the little children to play.

The Board will carefully consider the petition at a meeting yet to be announced, and a decision arrived at.

Board of Health Views:

In response to a call from a member of the School Board, Dr. J. R. Downes, president of the Board of Health, inspected the old building last Wednesday and found it sanitary, insofar as the actual condition of the toilets were concerned. On Tuesday of this week, Dr. Downes, accompanied by Prof. Merrill Smith, secretary of the Board, again visited the building, with results as already noted.

Stories Do Not Fit

These, in brief, are the stands taken by the principals concerned in the case.

Throughout the investigation carried on in the interests of both sides, The Post has found statements to be at complete variances. At least three persons, whose names may be had on request, assert that the old building was thoroughly cleaned for the first time in weeks just prior to the first visit of the Board of Health representative.

On the other hand, Superintendent Owens stated in this connection that the Board's visit "was made under regular, every-day conditions." He added that the "sanitation question is entirely up to the Board of Health."

Mr. Bonham, actively at the head of the movement to have the Primary pupils moved into the new building, is emphatically outspoken concerning conditions at the old school, and sees no reason why the youngsters cannot be moved over without hampering the final work on the new building.

Mr. Gallaher's Statement

Robert S. Gallaher, a member of the Board, said today: "The Board is unanimous in its position that it (Continued on Page 4.)

FIFTY YEARS AT THE FORGE

In Which Gilpin Chambers Recalls the Waning Generation of Horsemen Who Brought Fame to Newark

By T. R. DANTZ

Fifty years at the Forge—thirty-eight of them spent in one shop. Shades of the "Village Smithy":
Regardless of one's personal opinion of Longfellow, his "Village Blacksmith" has a universal appeal. Yesterday, it chronicled a reality, a cross-section of Life. Today, it reads as a Legend. The new generation will never thrill to the sight of spark showers from the forge, to the music of hammer on the anvil. "Sentiment," you say? Perhaps! The youngsters will continue to grow, prosper or fail, as Life wills it—smithy or no smithy. It isn't that. It's just a touch of sadness which comes when the last refuge of the Horseman surrenders and passes on.

This is a story of one who has studied horses and men for fifty years. His name is Gilpin W. Chambers. Day in and day out, the music of his anvil rang from his shop on South College avenue. Everybody knew "Gil" Chambers. They still know him. There is little need for his introduction to the people of Newark.
The greatest trouble with the story, as you may readily guess, is the fact that Mr. Chambers is not telling it. To have him take you back to the days when Horse was King; when every hopeful swain banked heavily on his "rig"; when Main street rang to pounding hoofs on winter nights—then, and only then, can you catch the real sentiment, the repressed sadness which mellowed his every sentence.
Walls which once looked down upon the finest horseflesh in the county now rattle to the exhaust of motors; gasoline pumps have replaced the bellows; where once men gathered to discuss gait, now gather men who talk carburetors. With the passing of "Gil" Chambers' blacksmith shop went the last stronghold. Within the short space of two years, the old shop is but a Memory. Tomorrow it will be forgotten altogether. And so goes Life.

Just fifty years ago, still a boy in his "teens," Gilpin Chambers started as an apprentice at Joseph Moore's shop near Pleasant Hill, in Mill Creek Hundred. From the day he entered that door until a year ago, he "carried on" his trade. He became his life work.
Mr. Chambers was more than reticent about his early training, but there is no doubt that he learned quickly. In a short time he went over to Stanton in his brother Joseph's Shop. There he stayed for about three years. Then came a four-year sojourn at the Pike Creek shop, nestled in the hills of Mill Creek. Young and strong, and eager to master his trade, he soon built up a tidy business. Thirty-one years ago, he opened his shop in Newark.
That's the bare record. As far as data goes, there is no more to tell.

The real story, however—the swirl of the Life which surrounded our fathers, seen through the keen, kindly eyes of the town's blacksmith, is what we wanted to hear.
Day after day, year after year, Mr. Chambers stood at his forge. In the space of his active work here, boys grew to manhood; Age crept upon his friends and carried them down to the grave; earnest suitors came to him with their spick and span horses; belles of the town with their saddlers. Good men, rich men, poor men, the whole wheat and the chaff—he saw them all; he knew them all.
It seemed but Yesterday to him, as he sat in his comfortable home the other day. Names of owners, little incidents; queer people; queerer horses—all tumbled out of him without effort. Naturally, he has evolved his own human philosophy.
Mr. Chambers is a firm believer in heredity. "Like father, like son" is not an idle phrase. Take for example, the man who sends his son for a horse at the shop, with evident instructions to disregard the annoying custom of paying. On the other hand, said Mr. Chambers, there were fathers who would never touch the horse unless the work was paid for. A petty method of judgment, perhaps, but the strange part of the incident comes when the sons have grown to manhood, and practice almost to the letter the methods of the fathers. And just to clinch his argument, Mr. Chambers happens to know several of the "kids" of bygone days, now grown to manhood—some of them paying all their bills, others—not so many.

These and hundreds of other observations, the daily opportunities to study humankind, a strong body, and perfect health, made the thirty-one years of Mr. Chambers' career here anything but monotonous.
Narrow escapes were everyday occurrences with him. In the entire span of nearly fifty years, he never suffered a serious injury. Horses have kicked through his clothes, under his arms, thrown him under their hoofs, snapped at him, and tossed him around like a cork—but they have never hurt him.
"Providence!" said Mr. Chambers. "I don't know what else it could have been. I came out of the game without a stiff joint or a sore muscle. I've struck some pretty mean horses in my day. I never used stocks. I let them stand free. Of course, that made it more dangerous to me. But, here I am, not a bit the worse for wear."

In that manner he nonchalantly put aside all the close calls he must have had.
Probably the tightest squeeze he had was when a big stallion in training with Herman Tyson, threw him directly under its hind feet. Mr. Chambers was on his back on the floor. Glancing up, he saw that massive hoof coming down on him. Almost instantly, he reached up and grabbed the fetlock. A horse, as horsemen know, will usually jerk the leg up when a hand is placed near the fetlock or hoof. Mr. Chambers knew that, and in the space of a wink, he took the one chance. Sure enough, the stallion nervously jerked the leg up, and another instant gave Mr. Chambers time to roll over and out of danger; he says this was about his closest call to serious injury or death.

Newark was a real horse town in the "old days." Good blood prevailed. Everyone had a nice driver, and many indulged in the luxury of a saddle horse.
Herman Tyson, premier reinsman of the town, was one of Mr. Chambers' best customers. Harry J. S., the champion of the stable; "Red Silk," "King Albert," the latter the fastest double-gaited harness horse in the East in his day, all the Tyson string came to Mr. Chambers. He knew them all, and loved them all.
But with all the blue bloods, the kings and queens of the track, the whips, the gentlemen of the circuits, the coach and fours, he still had a full measure of love for the solid old Farmer's horse, the patient, sturdy puller. Many a highstrung gelding stood aside in his shop, while Dobbin had new shoes carefully fitted. Mr. Chambers played the game fair; he knew neither fear nor favorites.
On many occasions while he "carried on" in Newark, Mr. Chambers could be found finishing job work by the light of lanterns far into the night. He was always at his work at 5 a. m. in the summer time, and an hour or so later in winter. He never seemed to tire. As he grew older, every stroke of the hammer counted, never a step from forge to anvil was unnecessary. There was no lost motion in this shop.

Along with his associate, Harry Tweed, who worked side by side with him for fourteen years, he turned out an uncommonly large amount of work per day. Mr. Tweed, himself an able blacksmith, is now employed by H. Warner McNeal, and occasionally works at one of the old anvils used in the Chambers shop long ago.
King Horse ruled in those days. At one time, not so many years ago, said Mr. Chambers, there were over 200 horses owned and quartered in Newark. He himself ran a livery with 50 head on the average. Two other liveries also held a good sized quota. Five doctors, averaging two horses apiece, were his regular customers.

All of which serves to conjure up from Memory those snappy winter nights when Newark was the Mecca for horsemen from three states.

Where steaming Fords tie up and anchor nowadays, shiny sleighs used to rest, with drapper horses, groomed within an inch of their life, champing at the bit.
While Today, the gum-chewing movie brigade, the bridge battlers, and the gasoline Lotharios flutter about town of a winter's night, it seems only yesterday to Mr. Chambers when

LOCAL STORE ROBBED LAST FRIDAY NIGHT

No Trace of Burglars Found, Following Entry Into Saunders Building

Local police are on the lookout for the man or men who broke into the store of William Saunders, Negro merchant on New London avenue, late Friday night last.
Saunders notified Magistrate Thompson of the robbery on Saturday morning. Entrance was made by forcing a window, it is said. On Saturday the owner of the store couldn't ascertain the exact amount of the loss.
As far as is known, the police have no definite clues in the case.

Assessment Revision Committee to have Copy of List

We are glad to announce that the Assessment Board has arranged for the local committee, appointed at the Town Meeting, to make a copy of the Assessment List. J. K. Johnston, chairman of that committee, is now having the clerical work done. It is expected to have the complete copy in a few days. Immediately then, the committee will meet and make such revisions as they think justified. Then they will meet with the Assessment Board and go over the revisions suggested and present them for the consideration of the Board of Assessment.

We understand that the Board has again expressed its willingness to co-operate and has assured the committee that consideration of the recommendations and decisions will be made in ample time for appeals to be made by those waiting to see if any adjustments are forthcoming.

This arrangement brings the situation in a very favorable light and it is expected that what has been an honest and serious misunderstanding will be adjusted satisfactorily to the rights and justice of all concerned.

We can say that the action and attitude of the Assessment Board will be accepted with genuine appreciation by the Community.

We wish further to say that the Assessment Board will find courtesy, fair consideration, co-operation, knowledge of local conditions and honest judgment from our Committee.

With this attitude on both sides, we look forward to satisfactory results. Congratulations to all those who have made this "getting together" possible. We await, with interest, the result.

SPECIAL SERVICES

Series Being Held at Presbyterian Church This Week

This evening Rev. John D. Blake, of Red Clay Church, will deliver the sermons. The program for the first of the week is as follows: Thursday night, Rev. Frank Herson, pastor of Newark M. E. Church; Friday night, Rev. Charles H. Bohner, pastor of Hanover Presbyterian Church, Wilmington.

Reception of members and observance of the Lord's Supper will constitute the services next Sunday morning at the church. It is expected that several new members will join the congregation at that time.

SCHOOL BOARD'S DECISION

(Continued from Page 1.) would be a mistake to move the Primary school children into the new building at this time. The original plans for completion of the building were disrupted by delays by the contractors. From the many people I have talked to concerning the decision not to move the children, only one has failed to appreciate and agree with the Board's viewpoint. Furthermore, the unfinished condition of the grounds will not in the least affect the older High School pupils, but will seriously hamper the handling of the younger children. The petition will, of course, be given careful consideration by the Board.

In discussing the situation, Superintendent Owens said in part: "I believe the Primary School is not materially worse in the matter of sanitation than it was last year. As far as I know, few parents have inspected the toilets there. This criticism came immediately upon the announcement that only High School students would be moved. I think it came as a result of disappointment on the part of primary school pupils, their parents and teachers. Since the decision of the Board, every effort has been bent in making the new building ready for High School pupils only. Equipment for only four primary classes has arrived. I see no special reason why those four classes should be taken over at this time to the exclusion of the other classes, three in number, originally scheduled to be moved.

The above statements and facts from a brief coverage of the question and are submitted to the readers of The Post without any attempt whatever to shade the issue one way or the other.

Interest in the situation is increasing day by day; parents, teachers and pupils now await the School Board's action of the petition.

"Good Roads, Flowers, Parks, Better Schools, Trees, Pure Water, Fresh Air, Sunshine and Work for Everybody"—OUR MOTTO

Reminiscences of Civil War Days in this Community

By R. G. BUCKINGHAM

R. G. BUCKINGHAM
G. A. R. Hero of this Community

We met R. G. Buckingham first back in 1910-1911. He was Representative to the General Assembly from Mill Creek Hundred. He attracted us from the first glance. A Character—we said. We called him "Joe Cannon" or General, as fitting to the occasion. But he was and is more than a character. A Soldier who knows war, sad and gay side, horrors and romance, yes. But a farmer of note, a banker, a politician with civic sense, a citizen active in any and every thing worthy of the thought and energy of Manhood.

This is not the place to recite our experiences and knowledge of the man. Others know it perhaps, even better than we.

For years we have tried to get him to write some of his recollections of the War—just chat along, so to say. At last he has modestly consented. In a contest political, or argument, he smiles but fights—no modesty then.

So here then is the first of a series of articles by our friend, your friend, Delaware's and America's friend.

Being a member of Co. E, 4th Regiment, Delaware Volunteers, enlisting on the 11th day of August, 1863, for three years or during the War.

Company E of the Fourth Delaware Regiment was recruited near Pleasant Hill and Corner Ketch (now called Union), Mill Creek Hundred. Our company was composed of neighbors who knew each other before enlisting. Pleasant Hill was a local post office back in those days, the mail being carried on horse back with the bag strapped on behind the saddle. Once a week, on Saturdays, the mail was taken from Pleasant Hill to Stanton and return. The farmers were eager to get their weekly papers, as there were very few daily papers through the rural district at that time.

There was a Lodge of Good Templars instituted at Union School House the Winter of 1861 and 1862. It was quite a strong organization, holding members of both sexes, and I have no doubt that the weekly meetings there had much to do with the patriotic fervor of the young men.

The Second Battle of Bull Run or Manassas had been fought between the two contending armies, resulting as we know, in the defeat of the Union forces. Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, then issued a call for 300,000 volunteers. If not volunteers, they were to be drafted into the service for three years or during the war.

About twenty young men out of the Lodge above mentioned, enrolled in Company E for three years. Your humble writer was one of the number who on the 11th day of August, 1862, was sworn into the United States service with some thirty others.

We were examined by our Colonel, A. H. Grimshaw, as to our fitness for military service. With a punch or two we were passed as able and capable of the hardships of army life. That office was on Market street, Wilmington, between Fifth and Sixth streets. We were then marched down to the White Horse Hotel, kept by Richard

K. Jones, at Second and Tatnall streets. There we drew our first suit of army clothes. Gosh! such fits were rather humiliating to a young man, even if he did live in the country. But after swapping around with some other comrades, we got pretty well fixed up. Thereupon we all got a leave of absence for eight days, to report at Brandywine Springs on the following Monday, the 18th.

On Monday morning, in a neighbor's two-horse wagon, about twenty of the boys, with one of their number beating an old kettle drum, landed at Brandywine Springs. We were marched into our wooden barracks, about 80 feet long and twenty feet wide, with a three tier row of bunks running lengthways of the barrack. From a good feather bed to the soft side of a pine board to lay upon, with your shoes or knapsack for a pillow.

I remember the first meal at the Cook House. The smell you caught at the door took your appetite, but later on you got accustomed to that. I had enlisted as a private, $13.00 per month, with some hopes that I might be a sergeant later on. I had not had any military experience, did not know how to fall a company into line, but one of our number, Lee Pusey, from Hockessin, had a little experience in the Mexican War. He drilled us a few times, marshalling the Company down to the creek in the morning to prepare for breakfast. Then there were a few days in drilling in right and left facing, marching by single and double file, right and left flanks. I soon caught on to the drill. Our arms and accoutrements were issued to us, consisting of an Enfield rifle with bayonet, all told weighing 18 lbs; bayonet, scabbard, cartridge box, haversack, canteen and knapsack. I will have more to say about the knapsack later on.

With a knapsack fairly well filled, with what we thought were indispensable articles of clothing, toilet articles, one hot September day the latter part

Baltimore Rector Pleads For Support Of Youth By Parents; Urges Home Worship

In a masterly sermon delivered at the weekly Lenten service in St. Thomas Church here last evening, Dr. Wyatt Brown, rector of St. Michael-All Angels Church, Baltimore, pleaded for stronger home ties between Parent and Youth, between Forty and Fifteen, and a sturdier, straightforward type of home worship.

His sermon was typical of those which have won him a place in the front rank of eastern clergymen. His utter simplicity of religion, his sincerity, and faith cropped out continually during the hour in which he spoke.

Admitting that the young man of today is losing that fine sense of honor, the chivalry towards womanhood; and that the modern young woman has deteriorated somewhat in her sense of modesty and reserve, he drove the point home, however, that all the fault lies not with the Youth of today, but largely with the Parent.

A strong, simple religious training from the cradle; more religious worship in the home, more reading of the Bible; the offering of more opportunities to the youngsters in the family for individual religious study—these things, in Dr. Brown's opinion, will make for a finer Young America.

In closing, the Baltimore rector again revealed the simple sturdy faith which is his, when he stated that "in the Book of Life, our reward will be measured not in what we want to do, but what we do." In many respects it was one of the finest sermons ever delivered here.

Siren Is Lowered

In an effort to get the maximum efficiency out of the new fire siren here, workmen have lowered the apparatus several feet down the tower erected for it. Several other changes have also been made. It is hoped by firemen that the alarm will now be heard in all parts of the community.

Report Gypsies In Robbery Attempts

Residents of Poplar Hill, Cowentown and Elk Mills communities in Cecil County are on the lookout for three Gypsy women, who, it is reported, have made several attempts to rob stores in the neighborhood. The alleged attempts have been made during the past week or two. An attempt to enter the Cowentown store was foiled, it is understood, by a phone message to the owner, who immediately locked the doors.

SALEM PLANS FOR 250th ANNIVERSARY

Salem, N. J., is making arrangements for holding the biggest celebration ever held in that town, which will be to commemorate the 250th anniversary of the founding of Salem. The celebration will begin Thursday, October 1, and continue for three days.

The first day of the celebration will call for the opening of a Loan and Historical Exhibit to be given under the direction of the Salem County Historical Society. It will be placed in the Annex of the Friends Meeting House on East Broadway.

On Friday, a feature of the day will be a ceremony depicting the arrival of John Fenwick, and his negotiations with the Indians for the right to occupy peacefully the land granted to him. The land, it will be recalled, which was granted to Fenwick by the English, comprised the territory embraced in what is now Salem and Cumberland counties combined.

Some of "Plain Jane's" Boys

The musical comedy chorus man is invariably looked upon as a sort of fifth wheel, and the boys who form that branch of a girlie show are generally dismissed with scant notice. The average manager usually throws them in to acquire his full stage complement and lets it go at that.

Not so, it is declared, with little Joe Laurie, Jr., the star of "Plain Jane" the musical comedy success coming to The Playhouse, Wilmington, on Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday afternoon, April 3 and 4. He uses eight men in his chorus, but each of them is an understudy for one of the principals and their work must range from supplanting Mr. Laurie, who plays "Kid" McGuire, to replacing Max Hoffman, Jr., as Kingsley, Jr., and from doing black-face to French dialect with a lot of dancing thrown in.

Under the direction of Alex. D. Cobb, the ability of the choir to render difficult chorus parts has been rapidly developed and it is promised that the cantata Sunday night will be a real treat.

$17,500 Land Award Not Enough For Goods

Cecil County Court's Decision May Not Close Conowingo Con- demnation Proceedings

The suit of the Susquehanna Power Company vs. Cecilia M. Goode and others to secure title by condemnation to land at Crumbley's Mountain, near Conowingo, needed in connection with the construction of its projected great dam and hydro-electric power plant, was set for trial in the Circuit Court at Elkton for last Thursday. The morning was spent in settling the issue to be tried by the jury. The company sought to secure a fee simple title to the property which it held was vested in Mrs. Goode alone. A jury was finally sworn for trial of the case and visited the property. On Friday the jury made its report to the Court and argument began, which lasted until Tuesday afternoon. The jury set $17,500 as the price for the property to be condemned but the owners are holding out for a much larger sum.

Elkton Assessors Predict 100% Rise

Newark is not the only town afflicted with the Assessment bee, from reports received this week.

Elkton is in the throes of the first thorough assessment of town property in many years. Assessors Manly Drennen and Charles P. Bartley are carrying the burden of the work, under direction of Elkton Council.

From statements made by these men before Council, it is predicted that a 100 per cent raise in assessed valuation of Elkton property will be the result of their labors.

On the other hand, a considerable reduction in the tax rate, probably 25 per cent, is seen. Since it has been so long since the town valuations have been brought up to date, Council is of the opinion that the additional revenue derived will make it possible to cut the taxes appreciably.

Fifteen days will finish the work, say the two assessors. They met with Council early this week and made a preliminary report containing the above information. At the end of this period, tax levies will be authorized, and Council hopes to realize enough money to begin active improvements throughout the town.

Easy Lessons In Golf

By EGBERT

NOTE - Herein is concealed the first of what is expected to be a series of articles on Golf. "Egbert" is really none other than a famous golfer who needs some money. He was brought to this paper's attention by one Joseph Spivak. It appears that these two boys went to school, or jail, or some place, together. Anyway, Egbert has been allowed to use this column which might have been used by an advertiser. Please mail all letters of comment to Egbert; under no condition, until then to me. I have enough troubles. - T. R. D.

1. How To Approach The Professional

In learning what I have nicknamed the Royal and Ancient Game, a Professional some times comes in handy. He's like an old pair of shoes - nice to have around when there's nothing else to put on.

Now, dear readers, comes the question of how to make the professional work the hardest for the least money. I have no doubt that several Newark golfers have solved this important problem. In fact, I know it.

Be sure to buy a stick of candy or a bottle of Whistle before approaching the subject. It often disarms the "Pro" (which of course, you all know means professional). It puts him in a mellow mood; makes him feel that, after all, you appreciate his ice box. In short, he has made a sale. Don't fail to do this.

Talk about anything but Golf. Ask him what he thinks of the World Court, Prohibition, Mutt and Jeff - making sure that he knows less about it than you do.

If he insists on showing you his clubs, that's all right. A good pun right here would be "What in the world, my dear fellow, do you use that funny little hoes-shaped thing for." That should draw a laugh. And when you get a Pro to laugh, it's seven-eighths of the battle.

Of course he'll take you out to the first tee (a tee is something which makes a good place to start from, since you must naturally start somewhere). When you get out there, insist on using his clubs. He will appreciate the delicate compliment. And remember, don't ever hit the ball the first two or three times. Tear up some turf to test his club. If it doesn't break, tell him how strong it must be; if it does break, he will probably apologize for buying it. You can't lose, either way. Such a procedure often warms up relations between you - really!

Next, if memory serves me right, he will endeavor to teach you how to hold the club, or clubs, as the case may be. Never be apt; never even appear to be apt. Remember, it's a job with him. Make no man's job too easy. Insist on holding the club your own way - that's sure to please him. Shows individual thought, you know. He will probably try to devote the whole hour to teaching you one thing. If so, slap him on the back, meantime murmuring something like this:

"I say, old topper, wouldn't it be a lot more fun hitting the ball or something?"

It's all a matter of psycho-analysis of character. Everybody likes a good joke - even a professional. I can think of no more disarming a pun than the above. The bubbling humor in it cannot fail to appeal. I leave it to you.

On the way to the locker room, offer him a five spot, give him a sly dig in the ribs, and wink the off eye. He'll probably think you're handing him a tip; he may even get angry. If so, you save a fiver. And anyone who can save a fiver on a pro need not worry about Mussolini. Even if he does get angry, it's because he is so interested in you. While he's dressing, it's always a good plan to snatch a chocolate bar, and "Shorty," the story reprinted in part in this issue of THE POST, is from the pen of a former Newark resident, John Jex. Scores of people in the community remember him and will thus be more than interested. Those who do not know the author will nevertheless find a rattling good yarn.

Mr. Jex, now a resident of Florida, published this story in "Sunshine," Florida's one outstanding monthly magazine. It is one of several stories he has published from time to time. At present he is gathering material for his first long novel.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Jex, Editor Herbert Felkel of "Sunshine" and our own Harry Bonham, who spent several days with his old friend Jex while in Florida recently, and told THE POST of the former Newarker's remarkable success in writing, we are enabled to herewith re-print the story direct from the pages of "Sunshine."

"Shut up, you cur!"

Sharp, like the crack of a lash, came the voice from someone in the dense crowd that filled the circus lot. Clearly it sounded above the crashing of brass and drum; and Shorty, the Scottish terrier, who was circling around the band, voicing his opinion of the music, stopped as if stung by a bullet. His ears drooped; his tail curled downward; his big black eyes moved slowly round in their wide sockets. Had the voice been strange, it might have been difficult for Shorty to identify the speaker in the vast throng that crowded the broad lot, for almost every one in Millersburg had come out to enjoy the circus band's free concert.

But Shorty knew that voice. It had hurled vile epithets at him ever since he was a year old. Because of it he had lately deserted his home and become a tramp. He had fought all the street dogs in the town, both large and small. His body was covered with scars from those fights. Yet he would rather fight all those vicious dogs again than be dragged home by the scruff of the neck and beaten by the master who now commanded him to stop barking at the sounds which hurt his ears.

He rolled his eyes again, and crept off towards a church across the street. In the court at the side of that old church he was always safe. Certain it was that his master never entered that court in which he had slept every night for a week.

But at that moment the band stopped playing, and a turbulent mass, more like swarming bees than struggling human beings, Shorty was kicked and jostled so roughly that he had to fight his way towards the distant church. And when he at last reached

"SHORTY"

A Real Dog Story

By JOHN JEX

(Copyright, 1924, by John Jex)

the street that same awful voice commanded him again:

"Go home, you black cur! I wish some cop would shoot you. Get out of the way. Get—"

A sharp pain shot through Shorty's body as the toe of a heavy boot struck him in the ribs.

"Oh, Jim, don't kick him." It was a woman's pleading voice - another voice Shorty knew well. "If you abuse him, Jim, he'll never come home to stay."

Then another voice, a very small voice, reached Shorty's ears and prompted him to look up at the bundle his mistress clasped to her breast. He raised his long, sharp nose and sniffed the air to see if that wee voice came from anyone he had ever known. But it wasn't the voice of a friend; and curious about the little stranger who now snuggled contentedly in the only arms that had ever held him, half jealous, although he had left those comforting arms for a life in the streets, he followed the family home and got safely into the house.

Anxiously he watched as his mistress laid the little stranger upon her bed and removed the blanket from the wee one. And when the others went into the next room he crept quietly over to the bed, stood up with his soft paws resting on the white covers, and sniffed at the little pink creature.

But as his cold, wet nose touched a soft, warm cheek his now little mistress let out a piercing scream, and before Shorty could retreat under the bed his furly masted was upon him. He was lifted bodily and flung through space to the far corner of the room, his head striking against the sharp leg of an oak bureau as he landed in a heap.

"Keep away from that kid," his master roared. "Keep away from her, you damned pup, or I'll throw you through the window. Do you hear me?"

Shorty evidently heard him, although he was stunned and blood was trickling down the side of his head into one eye. Bue he wasn't going to run away. He worshipped children. Every child he met on the streets stopped to pet him. The little ones were the best part of his tramp life. He had often dreamed of a home with one of them for a playmate; and now that there was a wee one in the home he had deserted, he was not sure that he would ever want to leave it again. But the home for which Shorty longed was a place filled with the sunshine of love; and even as he crept across the room and back under the bed his master's voice thundered:

"Shut up, you howling kid! Come in here and shut her up, Nell. I hear enough of her yelling—all day long—without having her yell all night, too. Get her to sleep—or take her outside till I get to sleep."

"I'll do anything to please you," his wife replied, with a shrug. "I'll take baby out into the garden for a while—even if it is past her bedtime."

Shorty cocked his head thoughtfully; his eyes flamed. When he heard the door creak on its hinges he darted from his hiding-place and went with his mistress and his new charge into the dark, chilly night. Quietly he followed them to a bench at the rear of the garden. And when his mistress began to sob softly he sat down close to her feet and cocked his head thoughtfully again. Not that it was a strange thing for his mistress to shed real tears. She always cried bitterly after a quarrel with his master; and they quarreled often. But tonight his mistress seemed heart-broken. Yet he dare not jump up onto the bench beside her. She might not appreciate his comforting when she had the little pink stranger in her arms. So he just snuggled his back close to her feet and waited till she spoke to him.

"Why did you come home, Shorty? I'm sure he'll kill you. He's threatened to kill you—and some day he'll do it if you stay here. Don't you think you'd better run away again, little GAL. 2—Shorty 3,28,25 JAK fellow?"

Shorty looked up at her long and steadily. He licked the frail hand she extended to him and wagged his tail. But his eyes widened anxiously when his mistress rose suddenly to her feet and called to him to follow her to the garden gate.

"I wish we could go away with you," his mistress said, quiveringly, "to some place far away from him. But we can't. So please go, Shorty. I love you so. It breaks my heart to see him abuse you. Go away—and stay forever this time. Some good people will take you in if you sit on their doorstep. I know they will, because you're such a dear little fellow. I can't take you over to Mother's. She doesn't like little fellows with four feet. Please go and find a real home, Shorty. Please go."

She knelt down and drew aside the blanket from the little stranger's face; and Shorty kissed the wee one's face with his rough little tongue. But he did not go out of the garden. He danced with joy as he followed them back into the house. He had forgotten the ugly cut on his head. His thoughts were of his little mistress only. She was helpless in the hands of his terrible master. She needed an ally with sharp teeth!

But Shorty's happy moment was brief. As they entered the house he stopped and raised his sharp nose high in the air. His master was drinking! And every time that odor reached his keen nostrils there was trouble. He recoiled from the sickening odor as he would have recoiled from a deadly rattler. His jaws parted slowly till his white fangs shone in the lamplight. His muscles stiffened for fight as his mistress laid the wee one on the bed and moved toward the doorway which led into his master's room. He barked a warning to her, and trembled with fear as an oath came from that room. He felt that something horrible was about to happen in there. He was relieved when his mistress retreated back through the doorway, cowed by the lash held before her face. He growled at the lash, but did not run from it. It might not be intended from his mistress; it might not be intended for him! That heavy black whip might fall upon his new little mistress, the utterly helpless one—and if it did—He growled again at the thought; and the big man towering above him roared:

"Damned cur! Will you shut up, or shall I kill you?"

Shorty raised his head slowly; but not to look up at the knotted lash. He didn't seem aware of his danger. There was a far-away look in his big, round eyes. All fear of death had suddenly left him. That new little mistress! He had known her less than an hour, yet God who created him gave him the courage to forfeit his life in her defense if needs be.

He continued to growl and showed more of his sharp, white teeth. The lash was raised higher. White arms extended above him caught the stinging blow as the lash fell. He stared up in amazement at the woman who knelt protectively over him. He looked past her at the big brute who staggered cursing from the room. Then he tried to lick the arms that had saved him from punishment, but his mistress turned upon him threateningly.

"Shorty, you're more trouble than help to me. You're not big enough to protect us, and you always growl at the wrong time. Can't you see that you're only making things worse here? Get out! Run away again. Go on, I tell you! Don't you understand?"

Only Two States Use Stripes For Prisoners

Maryland and Delaware Penal Rules Compared With Other States; White Uniforms in Havana

Practically every state in the Union requires prisoners in penal institutions to wear some kind of uniform, except Delaware and Maryland, according to a report submitted to the Board of Welfare, at Baltimore, Md., last week, by Robert S. Cass, secretary. It was pointed out that Arkansas, Mississippi and the Southern States require striped uniforms to be worn.

In many of the States prisoners are placed in striped uniforms for violation of prison rules or violation of parole. At the Ottawa prison, Canada, prisoners are required to wear blue woolen uniforms in winter and brown denim uniforms in summer.

White Uniforms At Havana

In the prison at Havana, Cuba, "all inmates wear white uniforms with a number on the breast of the shirt," it was stated. At the Eastern State Penitentiary, Philadelphia, prisoners wear blue denim material consisting of a coat, trousers, cap and shirt, and are not allowed to wear civilian clothing.

Col. John C. Groome, warden of the Pennsylvania prison at Philadelphia, wrote to Mr. Cass: "Personally I think the inmates of all penitentiaries should wear striped clothing." On the other hand, authorities at prisons in California (San Quentin), Massachusetts, Nebraska, New York (Auburn Prison), Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont and Maine wrote that stripes never are used.

Trusties in Civilian Garb

Arizona requires prisoners to wear uniforms of "a gray herringbone cloth; all trustees are permitted to wear civilian clothing, and the authorities there are opposed to uniforms of a distinctive type."

In Maryland and Delaware prisoners are permitted to wear civilian clothing. At Folsom prison, California, two types of uniforms are in use. There gray cassimere uniforms are required of all inmates except those who have attempted to escape and those violating their parole; of the latter striped uniforms required for one year.

Stripes for Rule Breakers

Those states which require striped uniforms for prisoners who have violated rules are besides Folsom, California; Alabama, Illinois (Joliet prison); Iowa (cheekered uniforms); Kentucky, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

In his report to the board, Mr. Cass wrote: "I am in receipt of a letter and samples from a manufacturing firm of prison clothing. The firm states that it is supplying fifteen to twenty states with material of a plain blue or grayish blue cloth and Arkansas and other Southern States with striped cloth."—Every Evening.

CITY SLICKERS TO HOLD DANCE

The City Slickers Club of the University of Delaware will give an "after-the-theatre" dance in the grill room of the Hotel du Pont on the evening of April 23. Dancing will commence at ten o'clock and continue until two. Music will be furnished by John Pool's Band which is featured in the Footlights Club's production of "Smox and Crax" that precedes the dance in the Playhouse.

Owing to the small capacity of the grill room, the sale of tickets will be limited. Len Daly, '21, and Holt Aikens, '20, will head the committee of entertainment for the dance. It will be remembered that this same organization gave a very successful dance-frolic in the Hotel du Pont after the Delaware-Dickinson game.

FORM NEWS BUREAU IN CAPITAL CITY

James F. Allee, Jr., and T. M. Gooden Head New Venture

Announcement was made last week of the establishment in Dover of a news bureau which will supply daily papers throughout the country with news and feature stories concerning Dover and most of the peninsula. The new organization, which will be known as the Capital News Bureau, is being sponsored by James F. Allee, Jr., and T. Marvel Gooden, and will have its offices in the Capital Printing Company building on The Green. Mauritz A. Hallgren, who has had many years' experience with metropolitan newspapers and press associations, including the Chicago Daily News, the Cincinnati Times-Star and the Associated Press, has been named editorial director and manager. At the present time he is organizing a corps of news gatherers who will eventually cover most of the peninsula south of Wilmington.

The policies of the bureau will be entirely non-political and non-sectarian.

Use the Whole Tree

"A more complete use of the tree, through scientific cutting of standardized raw material and through improved methods or remanufacturing raw materials so cut," is the avowed object of "Wood-working Industries," successor to "Wood Turning," published in Milwaukee. The first issue under the new name takes its text from the Forest Utilization Conference held recently in Washington.

GOVERNOR PROCLAIMS ARBOR DAY

Governor Robinson, in proclamations issued, designates Friday, April 24, as Arbor Day, and the week of April 27 to May 3, inclusive, as American Forest Week.

President Coolidge recommended to the Governors of the various states that the above week be set apart as American Forest Week. In his proclamation relating to Forest Week, Governor Robinson says: "Whereas I believe that the citizens of Delaware realize the need for the conservation of the forests and timber in order that the shortage may not become any more acute;

"I, Robert P. Robinson, Governor of the State of Delaware, do hereby designate the week of April 27-May 3, inclusive, as Forest Week for the State of Delaware, and urge that as many of our citizens as possible plant a tree during that week, and thus do their share in the timber supply for the coming generation.

In his proclamation designating April 24 as Arbor Day, Governor Robinson says: "Realizing the great need for the planting and preservation of trees and the necessity to our future industrial life and strength as a State and Nation, and

"Whereas by Act of the General Assembly the Governor is authorized to set apart each year a day to be designated as Arbor Day,

"Therefore, I, Robert P. Robinson, Governor of the State of Delaware, do hereby designate Friday, April 24, 1925, as Arbor Day for this State, and I do hereby urge and request its observance by all public schools, private schools, colleges and other institutions, by the planting of trees for the adornment of the school and public grounds, and further urge the suitable exercises having for their object the advancement and study of arbor culture, and the cultivation of an appreciative sentiment concerning them."

Methodists Planting

The Southern Methodist University at Dallas has a memorial tree-planting campaign under way. The trees are to be planted along Bishop Boulevard from Mocking Bird Lane to Dallas Hall, and registered in the tree-planting army of the American Tree Association at Washington.

Plant Ocean Drive

Plans for tree planting along the ocean boulevard from Jacksonville to Miami are being mapped out by women's clubs along the route. The American Tree Association at Washington sends tree-planting suggestions for such work to any who send a stamp for postage.

THE DEER DAMAGE MUST STOP
 Pennsylvania Farmers Seeking Legislation Through Grange Aid
 The Grange in Pennsylvania is enlisting the farmers in a state-wide endeavor to check the depredations by deer, and the movement is rapidly gaining headway. Damage to farm crops and fruit is every season becoming greater and farmers are demanding protection from the legislature against further depredations. Under certain restrictions Pennsylvania farmers may shoot deer found doing damage to their property but the killing must be immediately reported, the carcass promptly dressed and the meat turned over to the state. Such a revision of the present law is demanded as will cut much of the red tape and permit the farmer who has suffered deer damage to retain the dressed meat. This is a lively topic among the Pennsylvania Granges and a strong sentiment for a changed law is the result.

 of the month, we had orders to move, with one day's rations cooked. We knew not where but we fell in by company, then in line as a regiment. "Forward March" was given with band playing, colors flying, we marched down pass Faulkland Mills, on up over the hill to what is now known as Ferris Reform School, where we halted for a rest. The thought that ran through my mind was: "If I had to carry that kind of a load and fight the 'Johnnies,' it would not be long before the 'Johnny Reb' would have me, bag and baggage."

We finally halted in a field near Greenville, where we had tents given to our comrades, with Mother Earth for a bed. Later on we were given straw for bedding. We guarded the du Pont Powder Works while encamped there, 8 or 10 men as a squad, patrolling down one side of the Brandywine, and up the other, in charge of a Commissioned Officer.

The election in the fall of 1862 occurred on the 4th of November. The Democratic Party claimed that as we had left our different Hundreds we had lost our residence and had no legal right to vote. They did not reckon with the fact that we were employed by the United States government, and hence had not lost our residence. On the morning of the election, the "Union" people of Mill Creek Hundred sent three farm wagons over to Camp du Pont to convey us to the Mermaid, the voting place of the whole Hundred. The word was passed around, "take your arms with you." Landing at the Mermaid about 1 o'clock, falling into line by twos, we marched down past the polling place, singing "Hang Jeff Davis on a Sour Apple Tree," (which should not have been allowed), countermarched and halted in front of the polling place, stacked arms, broke ranks and proceeded to the window to vote, where we were confronted by a few old six-shooter pepper-box pistols. We were ordered to fall in line, take arms and with bayonets fixed, "forward march." The porch was cleared and all voted that had a legal right to vote. That was called by the boys the "Battle of the Mermaid." Results: No blood shed; five prisoners taken, Jesse B. Ball, Hotel proprietor at Corner Ketch, Joseph Abbott, Andrew Shock, Isaiah Ball and Samuel Little, called Tecumseh Little from his general appearance. They were taken to Camp du Pont and placed in confinement in the second story stone house close to Greenville station, Christiana Hundred. The boys that did not accompany the prisoners to camp were taken back to camp by way of Stanton, where they were served a sumptuous dinner by the proprietor, Springer McDaniel, an extremely loyal man, after which we were taken back to camp and talked over the events of the day around the camp fire.

On the following Friday evening it commenced to snow and kept it up without abatement until Saturday afternoon. We received orders to move. Your humble writer, with two other comrades, were sent out to notify and bring into camp those that were on short leaves of absence and also many that had left camp on account of the storm, without leave (called French leave). About 4 o'clock we started across the country for Pleasant Hill, topping at Newton Chambers' on the Limestone road to make inquiry in reference to some of the boys, where we were served a supper that we did ample justice to. Arriving at home, the word was passed around the best we could that the Regiment was ordered to move. We returned to camp on Sunday afternoon with several of our absent boys, to find the camp broken up, the Regiment ready to move. Gathering up our belongings, we fell into line and marched down the Kennett Pike into Wilmington, down Delaware avenue to Market street, to Front and West, to an old factory, where we were quartered for the night, took train the next day to Washington, amid cheers by many, cries and sobs by a few, as they thought it was the last farewell of many of the boys. We landed at the old Baltimore and Ohio depot and into a building with this inscription over the door, "Soldiers' Rest." As I remember, three tables sufficient for a regiment of 1000 men to stand and eat, greeted us. Tin cup and tin plate, a third of a loaf of bread, cup full of coffee. We quartered in the building over night. Breakfast in the morning, then left for Virginia. My next letter will be from Virginia standpoint.

Christiana Colored P.-T. A.

There was a large attendance at Christiana Colored School when the P.-T. A. met on Friday evening, March 27th. The children gave an interesting program and the sale of refreshments netted the association a sum of money to add to their treasury.

Richardson Park

A splendid musical program was given in connection with the meeting of Richardson Park P.-T. A., March 30th. The chief talk of the evening was on "Health," by Miss Blanche E. Lockwood, of the State Health and Welfare Commission. Plans for a bazaar to be given by the association next month were discussed. Delegates to represent the P.-T. A. at the State Convention, April 18th, were appointed.

Delaware City Colored P.-T. A.

The fifth meeting of Delaware City Colored P.-T. A. was held on Wednesday evening, March 18th, with about 35 present. During the evening's program, the last of the "Face the Facts" subjects was thoroughly discussed by all present. It dealt with "Human Relationships."

THE WHIPPING-POST STAYS

From The New York World
 By almost unanimous vote, the Delaware Legislature has refused to abolish the whipping-post. It would be interesting to hear just why the legislators esteem it so highly, to hear the results it accomplishes in practice. At first glance, it seems unspeakably brutal; yet its brutality may be more apparent than real. It probably does little injury to the candidate, and under certain circumstances it may possess an adequacy that ordinary punishment surely lacks. In the case of a wife-beater, for example, giving him thirty days in jail is missing the mark altogether. He is punished very little, but his family, being deprived of his earnings, is punished severely; and thus retribution is visited on the very persons who were to be avenged. But tying the offender to the post and giving him ten lashes gets results. It punishes him summarily and effectively, and since it is over in a few minutes it has none of the undesirable features of a jail term. It should act as a deterrent to all prospective wife-beaters, and it has the added advantage of saving the county the cost of feeding a worthless prisoner.

The more one thinks about it, the more ideal it seems. But alas! alas! it has the defect of so many ideal schemes. It has the same defect as Prohibition: considered socially and economically it is fine—for the other fellow. For wife-beaters it is simply unbeatable. But how about ourselves, us virtuous citizens who never break the law? Suppose we got hauled up for being saucy to a policeman, and a zealous Judge sentenced us to ten lashes? It wouldn't seem so ideal then. Echoes of the constitutional guarantee against cruel and inhuman punishment begin to rattle around in our heads at once. No, Delaware is wrong. That law ought to be repealed. It is a fine law for thou, thy or thine, thee, he she, him her and it. But it is a terrible law for me.

The recent death in Washington, D. C., of Miss Fannie L. Kelley removes the last member of a family made famous in connection with the formation of the Grange organization, of which Oliver H. Kelley, affectionately known as "Father Kelley," was the original promoter. Only two persons now living were connected with the early Grange founders, one being Mrs. Eva S. McDowell of Wellesley, Mass., whose husband was associated with Mr. Kelley as a founder, and Major Wm. M. King, of Washington, D. C., now in his 93d year, who has spent a lifetime of service in the United States Department of Agriculture. Both these veterans retain membership and an active interest in the Grange, Mrs. McDowell having served for 25 years as treasurer of the National Grange while Mr. King was recently chosen one of the officers in the newly-organized subordinate Grange at the Capital.

Main street was lined with cheering crowds, watching Newark's one big winter sport—sleigh races.

From the Deer Park to "the Center," night after night, the jousts kept up. Pridelul owners brought their steeds down to town from the hill country of White Clay, from Elkton, Corner Ketch, Hockessin, Moddetown—and for fun. In that day, commercialism was unknown. There were no prizes. The drivers raced their horses, and won or lost with a smile.

No system ruled, according to Mr. Chambers. A group of sleighs would suddenly start jogging down from the Deer Park, each driver "letting out" a bit at every step, and in an instant the race was on. The Washington House was the unofficial judges' stand. The horses flashed by there at top speed. A slow turn at the Center, a jog back up town, while other pairs came pounding down—they were ready for the next one. The incessant bells on the horses, the glint of shiny flanks, the steady hammering of many hoofs on the hard-packed snow. Cheers, laughter and a hum of excitement from the crowd—street lights throwing weird shadows across lawns,—surely, it must have been a wonderful sight.

There was Herman Tyson, of course, calm, easy going, taking a "brush" as intently as he ever scored for the word; Daniel Thompson, with his dainty little black mare, the late John Pilling, always an ardent horseman, and a keen driver; Warner McNeal, and a score of other Newarks, beside the host of visitors. On Saturday nights, the old town seethed and rocked to the sport.

"Yes, of course there was danger," said Mr. Chambers, "but no one seemed to get hurt. Two lines of sleighs covered the street—a racing line one way, and a jogging line the other. There were no ropes. People dodged across at their own risk."

"But I can't tell you much about it," he continued. "You know I've never yet seen an evening's racing, though I worked only a few yards away. The drivers piled down on me those nights in a cloud to have their steeds "sharpened," loose shoes tightened, new shoes put on. As far as I was concerned, they might as well have raced in Hong Kong."

Only one horse was badly hurt, to his recollection. That happened when Levi Fisher's little racer ran a shaft through its breast just at the Library Corner, and died shortly later. It was a peculiar accident, rarely ever seen.

Then, with the rise of the auto, the sport flickered and died out. It would no doubt be hard to convince the youngsters today that there actually used to be hitching posts on Main street. One or two still remain. And sometimes, when no one's looking, we lay a hand on the gnarled, bent iron and try to conjure up a beautiful horse from the mist of auto smoke rising from the street. But we've lost out. Anyway, people would think us demented. The Horse is gone—forever—perhaps. Life is inexorable. There is little feeling in it.

But get an "oldster" down, and creep behind his veil of Modernism; there you will find what we mean. Call him old-fashioned, call him a sentimentalist, call him what you will, you will never break the tie that binds him to the love of a good horse.

There is perhaps no man who feels the sadness more than Mr. Chambers. It's not in his voice, nor in his words. It's in his eyes. He misses the old friends, the old days, the smell of the scorched hoof, the ring of the anvil. No man can give up the work of fifty years and forget it in two. He's trying earnestly to put it down—to keep pace with Life as we lead it. But it's hard work.

And that's the reason, as near as we can guess, why he patiently carries us back into other days in this story. For once, we are proud to be old-fashioned, proud to have been taken into his confidence.

We happen to love horses, too. That's all.

should she send him away when he was doing his best to help her? But his mistress no longer wanted him; there was no sympathy in her flaming eyes. And presently, with drooping ears and tail, he turned and went out of the house. At the circus grounds he might find some of the friends he had met earlier in the evening!

But the hour was late. There was but one other dog on the streets; a dissipated-looking poodle seated on the running-board of a car which he was guarding. When Shorty reached the circus lot only a homeless hound lurked about the dark tents. And the hound sat down to bite at a flea as Shorty came near him. And as Shorty had all the fleas he needed to remind him to do his daily dozen each morning, he squatted upon the cool grass a safe fifteen flea-hops from his friend his friend.

"What a dog's life that poor fellow leads!" he seemed to be thinking as he cocked his shaggy head. "I wonder how long it will be before I am like him?"

He was still wasting pity on the hapless tramp when a heavy hand fell upon his head and startled him. But it was only a policeman who had three little fellows like him at home; a policeman who had befriended him a number of times.

"Keep away from that fellow," the officer smiled. "He's looking for someone like you to share his fleas with. Come along down to the station with me. The man who runs that luncheon wagon across from Headquarters threw out some bones tonight when I was passing. Come along down with me and get a square meal."

Shorty went with him gladly, and not only enjoyed a meal of boiled marrow-bones but in addition passed a comfortable night as a guest at Police Headquarters. When morning came he trotted back up town without once stopping to meditate upon his troubled life.

He went straightway to the circus lot, and got there just in time to see a rehearsal. Herded together near the largest tent were a dozen long-legged dogs, half Greyhound, half Great Dane; and standing guard over the dogs was a man with a long whip. A second man was setting up what appeared to be a portable fence about five feet high. Then, suddenly, the first man cracked the whip and the dogs leaped over the fence, one by one. Crack! went the whip again, and the dogs repeated the performance. And they did it so easily! Such jumping made Shorty open his eyes wide. It made him feel so small that he went back to the very edge of the lot and sat down in a heap. And he believed in "Safety First." If the long-legged jumpers objected to a loafer watching them and suddenly made after him he ought to have at least a little handicap!

But the dogs didn't see him, and after marveling at their performance for a time he stretched himself and started away, feeling that a tramp dog with his freedom was better than a show dog who was admitted only for what he was driven to do under the lash.
