Newark v. 2008

City has undergone major changes this summer with more to come

By SCOTT GOSS

POSTNEWS@CHESPUB.COM

Newark's daily population will more than double over the next week as roughly 16,300 University of Delaware students take up residence here in time for the fall semester.

Quite a lot has changed since students left town for the summer break, particularly in downtown Newark.

Some of those changes are complete. Some are still in progress, while a few are only now getting off the ground.

"When you think about summer being only three months, there really has been a lot of change," said Maureen Feeney Roser, the city's interim planning director. "There is a lot of

City electric rates jump by 17.5 percent

August bills include extra 2.4 cents per kilowatt-hour

By SCOTT GOSS

POSTNEWS@CHESPUB.COM

The roughly 10,000 customers who purchase electricity from the City of Newark can expect to see a sizeable rate increase when their August power bills arrive in the mail early next week.

City officials announced on Monday that customers would be charged an additional 2.4 cents per kilowatt-hour in their August bills – a 17.5-percent increase to the previous rate of 13.5 cents per kilowatt-hour.

That means even the smallest monthly electricity bill allowed by the city – a minimum charge of $4.05 for 30 kilowatt hours – will jump by 72 cents.

No public hearings or official vote by city council was held on the rate increase, which was announced on Aug.

25 despite having been quietly imposed four weeks earlier.

City Finance Director Dennis McFarland said the city is permitted to authorize the rate change without prior public notice because the actual base rate of 13.5 cents per kilowatt-hour has not changed.

Instead, city officials have authorized a 2.4-cent increase in the Purchased Power Cost Adjustment (PPCA), a previously unbilled charge that

Lopata tells public why he's the best pick for city manager

First of three job candidates meets the public

By SCOTT GOSS

POSTNEWS@CHESPUB.COM

Roy H. Lopata Jr. said this week that he loves being Newark's interim city manager so much he would be willing to do the job for free.

"Whether I'm getting a phone call about low flying aircraft or tango lessons at the rail station, I love solving problems," Lopata, one of three candidates for the city manager job, said during an hour-long meet-and-greet session with about two dozen city residents on Aug. 26. "I never leave (the Newark Municipal Building) thinking that I don't like what I'm doing."

All three candidates for the city manager job will interact with the public this week as a part of the interview and hiring process established by city

First Responder school on its way

Career high school exempt from moratorium on charter schools

By MARY E. PETZAK

MPETZAK@CHESPUB.COM

A proposed "First Responder" high school is on schedule to open as a charter school in Wilmington in 2010 despite strong opposition that began after a release announcing the school was published in May.

While the school has its defenders, including the Delaware General Assembly, many see the Delaware Academy for Public Safety and Security (DAPSS) as a sign of a post Sept. 11 environment that restricts civil liberties and expands police powers.

The public also has expressed concerns that at students at the school could become academically deficient as a result

What's good for Biden is good for Del.

By MARTY VALANIA

MVALANIA@CHESPUB.COM

Newsweek called and wanted old photos of Joe Biden. Another news outlet called and wanted information on the crash that killed the senator's first wife and daughter.

That was only the beginning of a week that brought intense media scrutiny – along with satellite trucks, reporters, photographers and talk show hosts – to Delaware. It all culminated Sunday morning with the now-famous text from Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama stating that Biden will be his running mate in November's presidential election – and then the cavalcade of vehicles leaving Biden's Greenville house as he headed to a rally in Springfield, Ill.

Biden, who has been in office for 36 years, now stands – if Obama wins – to be Delaware's highest-ranking political office holder ever.

What does this mean for Delaware?

Well, it means there will be a whole lot of attention on our state between now and Nov. 4. It doesn't matter what political party you're affiliated with – or how you're going to vote – it's a good thing for Delaware to have one of our own go through this process.

We live in a small state and, unlike most every other state, there's a good chance you've heard Biden talk, seen him at an event like Newark Nite, the Flower Market, the Memorial Day parade, Liberty Day or some other event and maybe even shaken his hand.

Whether you're a Republican or a Democrat, you have to appreciate the

Food Bank opens discount food market

By JOSH SHANNON

NEWARK POST CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Spurred by the rising cost of food and the realization that many families are struggling to find affordable groceries, the Food Bank of Delaware has opened a discount food market in its Newark warehouse.

Food Bank officials said the market would sell food that has damaged packaging or is slightly past its expiration date at prices 75 percent below what a customer would pay at a supermarket. The food will be purchased from the salvage loads of stores that can no longer sell the products.

Nick Mirkay, chairman of the Food Bank of Delaware said there are more people requesting assistance with food than ever before.

"We're seeing people come for food who used to be on the other side of the fence, helping us collect food," Mirkay said.

Food Bank President Patricia Beebe said that although the discount market was designed for those in need who do not qualify for direct assistance, anyone is welcome to shop there.

"We'll take anybody's money," Beebe said. "You just have to have cash and you can't be talking on the cell phone at the checkout."

All proceeds from the Food Bank's discount market will go to support its other programs.

Beebe said the idea for the market came last summer when the Food Bank was operating mobile pantries in Wilmington.

"It brought home to us that there's no place you can buy affordable food in inner-city Wilmington," she said.

Beebe said she hopes to move the market to Wilmington once the Food Bank can find a suitable location. She said they also plan to find a second location near Sparrow Run.

Beebe said that once the discount store moves to a permanent location, she hopes to expand it to carry frozen and refrigerated foods. Currently, the store has only a small refrigerator for milk and eggs.

Most of the market's offerings are canned and boxed foods. The inventory also includes a considerable selection of cosmetics, as well as various children's toys and household goods.

Kim Kostas, community relations manager of the Food Bank, said the choice of products would vary widely from week to week, depending on what surplus items the Food Bank can purchase.

"It's really an adventure to come in here and see what all we have," Kostas said.

All food sold in the market will be purchased by the Food Bank. Donated food still goes to member agencies serving the poor.

While the discount store first opened three weeks ago, it was officially unveiled in an Aug. 21 ceremony that featured State Treasurer Jack Markell, a Democratic candidate for governor, and state Sen. Charlie Copeland, a Republican candidate for lieutenant governor.

Both politicians praised Food Bank officials for their work to establish the market.

"This is about great people having the courage and the vision to try really great ideas to help the people of Delaware," Markell said.

Kostas said she has already noticed the impact the market is having. Last week, a woman came in and bought an entire load of groceries for $57.

"She started to cry, she was so overwhelmed," Kostas said.

The market, located at 14 Garfield Way, is open from 2 p.m. until 3:30 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday; from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. on Fridays; and from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. on Saturdays.

Markell's wife, mother visit Newark Senior Center

Family highlights candidate's plan to help seniors

It was a family affair when Carla Markell visited the Newark Senior Center on Aug. 22 to promote her husband's gubernatorial campaign.

The wife of State Treasurer and Democratic gubernatorial candidate Jack Markell, Carla was joined by her mother and her mother-in-law as she talked to seniors and passed out campaign literature.

The visit was part of Carla Markell's statewide tour of senior centers, which are meant to highlight her husband's "Golden Year Guarantee," a set of three initiatives targeted toward older people.

Markell said senior issues are important to her and her husband because they see their parents facing the same health care and housing difficulties that many seniors face.

"We both have parents who are seniors," she said. "So, we're living this every day."

Leni Markell, a permanent member of the senior center who is well-known there for her ping pong skills, told seniors that her son would be a good advocate for them because he understands their needs in terms of the economy, health care and education for their grandchildren.

She said older people could make a difference in the election.

"Seniors are well informed these days because they pay attention to the issues," she said.

Carla Markell said she was amazed by the number of seniors she has met who told her that they moved to Delaware after they retired to

EDUCATION NEWS FOR NEWARK FROM LOCAL SCHOOLS

NOTE PAD

School bus safety

With buses and children crowding the streets again, we should all revive our school-zone safety knowledge. Remember:

- It is against the law to pass a stopped school bus while its lights are flashing and its STOP arm is extended.
- On undivided roadways, with no physical barrier or median, vehicles must stop on both sides of the roadway.
- Yellow flashing lights indicate that the bus is preparing to load or unload children. Motorists should slow down and prepare to stop.
- Red flashing lights and extended STOP arms indicate that children are getting on or off. Motorists approaching from either direction must wait until the red lights stop flashing before proceeding.

Junior Gardener classes

New Castle County Master Gardeners will come to school with environmental science and horticulture programs designed to complement Delaware State Science Education grades K-4 standards.

Junior Gardener programs are free! Some have nominal per-student fees to cover costs of materials and supplies.

In the last three years Master Gardeners have been in 64 schools and reached over 14,000 students!

Fall sessions are available and some offerings must be requested long in advance as this program books quickly. For more information, call 302-831-COOP (2667) or email to ncc-ext@udel.edu or visit <http://ag.udel.edu/nccmg>.

Parents like Charter Schools

According to a report published by the Center for Education Reform, Americans give Charter Schools, performance pay and school choice consistently high marks. "People want immediate opportunities for children that work, regardless of what it is called or if it is outside of what they have grown up to view as traditional public education," said CER president Jeanne Allen. ## Keene students set up news bureau

Reading specialist Janet Salaki got an enthusiastic response when she proposed publishing a newspaper to one of her classes at Keene Elementary School last spring.

The students chose a name for their publication, "Koala Times," and developed assignments for writers, reporters, photographers and even cartoonists and illustrators.

They covered Family Night, Field Day, the 2008 Book Fair and the Talent Show. They interviewed teachers and other students. They even had a weather report!

One student confidently wrote a very articulate opinion piece about why she thinks Barack Obama should be president. Everyone in the Keene community should be proud of what these students were able to do.

New policies for childcare meals

The Delaware Child and Adult Care Food Program (CACFP), part of the state's Department of Education, announced changes to its nutrition policies that affects every licensed childcare center and after-school provider as well as more than 900 family childcare homes in the state.

The policies, which apply to more than 53,000 children in childcare and after-school programs, went into effect on July 1. The policies represent some of the most progressive nutrition mandates in the nation for childcare programs. Among the new policies are the following:

- No fruit juice for children under the age of 12 months and no more than four ounces of 100 percent juice per day for children over the age of one year. No fruit drink that is not 100 percent juice may be offered.
- Whole milk for children 1-2 years of age and 1 percent or fat-free milk for children older than age 2.
- Only real cheese may be served rather than cheese "food" or cheese "product."

- Each day, one whole grain product (where a whole grain is listed as the first ingredient) must be offered. All grain products must contain no more than 6 grams of sugar. Sweet grain products, such as cookies and donuts, may be served only once in a two-week cycle, though they are not recommended.
- Baked or pre-fried foods (tater tots, chicken nuggets) are not recommended and may be offered only if they contain less than 35 percent total fat.

- Processed meat products, such as hot dogs and baloney, may be served only once in a two-week cycle, although they are not recommended.
- More than 1,000 childcare centers and family day care providers are affected and 500 home-based providers must comply when new family childcare regulations take effect later this year.
- Beth Wetherbee, education specialist for CACFP said, "The new food policies are the result of a year-long collaboration with sponsors of childcare centers and family childcare homes, local food vendors and Nemours Health and Prevention Services. Through the hard work of our food program partners, Delaware is a leader in the nation for providing healthy meals to children."

According to Elizabeth Walker, program and policy Analyst for Nemours, about 65 percent of Delaware's licensed childcare providers receive support from CACFP to pay for meals and snacks. "These new policies have the potential to both ensure adequate nutrition and instill healthy habits in young children, Walker added. "It's a major step forward, and one that few states have taken. I'm proud to say that Delaware is on the leading edge with its standards for nutrition in childcare."

Child or adult day care centers, child care home providers, parents of children enrolled in daycare or caregivers for adult participants enrolled in daycare who want more information concerning CACFP or sites that currently participate should call 302-735-4060.

Local teens earn Gold Awards, scholarships

Kiarra Cannon and Shannon Mossman of Newark, Jenna Allen and Rebecca Lowiza of Bear and Meagan Santangelo of Middletown were among 17 Girl Scouts Delmarva Power Foundation recently honored with a total of $10,000 in post-secondary education scholarships for successfully completing their Girl Scout Gold Awards.

Mossman created and ran a cheerleading camp for girls with special needs to earn her Girl Scout Gold Award. Her camp focused on team building skills through basic cheers, chants, crafts, and games. A final performance included everything the girls had learned throughout the week, allowing the girls to share with their families their hard work and accomplishments.

Allen and Cannon created and implemented a web page on MySpace.com to inform and educate teens about the risks of diabetes. Because the site was set up on MySpace, future Girl Scouts of Troop 1096 can continue to update the page and provide information about diabetes risks and prevention to teens for years to come.

To earn her Girl Scout Gold Award, Santangelo increased environmental awareness with her Household Hazardous Waste Drive for the Middletown, Odessa and Townsend communities. She spread the word about household hazardous waste and her Drive through a website, flyers, bulletins and other marketing tools.

The Drive collected nearly 14,000 pounds of waste. Santangelo hopes her efforts will spread the word about dangerous household waste, such as household appliances, paint cans and many other items, and encourage people to properly dispose of those items.

Project info for Lowiza was not available.

"Delmarva Power's generosity demonstrates a firm commitment to furthering the educations of girls in our community," said Anne T. Hogan, CEO of the Girl Scouts of the Chesapeake Bay Council.

The Girl Scouts also received a total award of $2,000 in scholarships from the Council's Board of Directors, and a total of $2,550 in scholarships from the Judy Taggart and Gloria Diodato Education Fund, named for the Council's retired CEO and Board chair, respectively.

A national award with high national standards, the Girl Scout Gold Award is recognized by colleges and universities, employers, and the military and is the highest award that a Girl Scout-age 14-18 years may earn. To receive the award, a Girl Scout must complete a minimum of 70 hours towards a community service project that improves her local community, the nation or the world. The service project encompasses organizational, leadership and networking skills, and ties in with the Girl Scout mission to "make the world a better place."

A leading advocate for and expert on girls, the Girl Scouts of the Chesapeake Bay builds girls of courage, confidence and character by providing personal leadership development and programs that teach skills for the real world.

The Have It Your Way Foundation awarded $806,000 in Burger King Scholars Program in 2008. Delaware's two high school seniors were recognized for their outstanding academic achievement, along with other academic and community involvement criteria.

Graduating seniors throughout the United States,

Puerto Rico and Canada are selected based on their grade point average, work experience, financial need, co-curricular activities and community service. Awards must be used for educational expenses, such as tuition or required fees and books, and must be used during

A Changing of the Garments

By MARVIN HUMMEL

NEWARK POST COLUMNIST

The note from the teacher was simple but clear, "Your son cannot return to school until he wears a decent shirt."

As any typical kid would, I rejoiced – but silently. (My parents believed in education and would have been dismayed at my pleasure in being expelled).

It had been a good shirt once, but I was its fourth wearer in five or six years, and it was a rag-with-buttons for at least a year before it got to me.

I had been embarrassed to wear it to school, but now it was my passport to freedom! I objected to my mother's cutting it up and making cleaning rags out of it – I wanted to keep that pathetic thing as a talisman of my release from the Witch who sent home the note. I lost.

A well-meaning lady, Mrs. Adams, somehow heard about the "situation" and hand-delivered her son Dean's old Boy Scout shirt. It had all kinds of awards, honors patches and initialed insignia on either side of the buttons. I didn't want it – but I got it and had to wear it.

My vacation was over.

After the first day of being mock-saluted by the other guys and being told by a sixth grade girl that she just "loved a man in a uniform," things calmed down and I almost got used to wearing it.

One afternoon, there was a big expensive car in front of our house. Before I could make an inquiry, my mother introduced me to its driver who was seated on our sofa, looking very official and grim. Had my Dad died? Were we being evicted? I KNEW there was something in his fancy leather briefcase that was bad news for us.

Nothing like that at all. He was a district representative of the Boy Scouts tracking down a "complaint." Somebody had seen me in the Boy Scout shirt, and knowing I was too young to be a member, she had called the Pittsburgh office and reported me as a "desecrator" of the cloth.

He was now able to confirm her complaint, and he had to ask me to "surrender the garment" as soon as I changed into a "civilian" shirt!

I was thrilled! I was on academic leave again! I practically threw the shirt at him in my delight. He was taken aback – what had he expected? Weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth?

My mother, who had always been obsequious in the presence of men with briefcases, let the bureaucrat have it, "He doesn't HAVE another shirt, stupid!" (Previously, the word "stupid" had been reserved for me.)

He finished filling out his "report" and took his leave in precipitous fashion. I ran after him to give him the shirt, but he didn't want anything more to do with me, the shirt, and, especially, my mother. Vroom! He and the big expensive car were soon out of sight.

I went to my room and composed a letter in what I hoped was a reasonable facsimile of a woman's handwriting. The text was, "There is a certain boy, living at 906 Fawcett Ave., McKeesport, who is dishonoring your noble organization by illegally wearing one of your garments. Please investigate immediately. Also, contact his school, Fawcett Avenue Elementary. His teacher is Miss Lois Watson, and she will be happy to cooperate with your good work. Sincerely, Mrs. Betty Naugle, neighbor."

A week later, my parents met me at the door with the letter.

Apparently, "Boy Scouts of Pittsburgh" had not been enough of an address, so it had been "returned to sender." My mother called me "stupid" and my Dad kept calling me "Mrs. Naugle" while waving the envelope and its contents under my nose.

They made me take the money I had been secretly saving to get a baseball glove and buy myself a shirt instead. (Or should I say "garment"?)

Parents mean well, but sometimes they can be so insensitive!

Aug. 31, 1933 Prospects good for Kindergarten in Newark

Those interested in having a kindergarten for this year met with the Newark School Board last night in the High School Auditorium at eight o'clock and discussed the situation. It is anticipated that there will be a kindergarten for this school year.

After an hour's discussion of the subject, a committee was appointed by the chairman to wait upon the School Board to see if it wasn't possible to legally finance the kindergarten out of the present school funds.

Phillips Packing Company help lands in Newark Jail

Last Saturday night was one of the busiest Saturday nights that the local police force has had for some time, making nine to ten arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Five or six male and female laborers, imported by the Phillips Packing Co., were arrested and lodged in jail for drunkenness.

It is inconceivable that a town has to put up with this type of imported help and it is anticipated that proper steps will be taken at the next session of Legislature for a law to prohibit importing this type of labor from out of the state. We can readily understand a company importing this type of labor during and since the war for it was obtainable for 8 cents to 10 cents an hour, but with the present economic conditions for the past two years, local help has been anxious to work at anything, practically regardless of compensation. This class of labor started this year, we understand, at 12 ½ cents an hour and was raised to 20 cents and 22 ½ cents under the NRA code.

Markell's skills outshine apparent heir to governor

Lynn Adelman
Newark

The Democratic Party of Delaware continues to spend Democratic dollars with the presumption that the party leadership has the right to suggest one Democrat over another in the governor's race.

What the party fails to address is that their criteria for the selection process may not reflect the criteria of the voters. For instance, my candidate of choice is someone who has taken the time to build a plan for a better Delaware and address issues vital to the economy and well being of this state.

From my observation, the party leadership's criteria are based on the time-honored tradition that the Lt. Governor is the heir apparent.

Presiding over the state senate for eight years does not give Carney the skill set to lead Delaware through difficult times. The last time that plan was put into action we ended up with eight years of lackluster leadership from the Minner/Carney administration and a faltering economy.

Jack Markell has spent the last several years building a plan for Delaware's future and he has put that plan in writing for all of us to review. He is the kind of leader Delaware needs and I hope my fellow Democrats will join me in voting for Jack Markell on Sept.

Markell is the way to go

Joe Horwitz
Wilmington

During the Minner-Carney administration, I have been shocked at some of the things that have gone unseen.

In the past year alone, the current administration has been plagued by one scandal after another. If it wasn't the Delaware Psychiatric Center, it was embezzlement in the Department of Finance, or having to slash a budget in the middle of the year due to wasteful spending.

It is clear that the Minner-Carney administration needs to be terminated all together. Jack Markell has the experience and leadership to turn Delaware around. I've been impressed with what I've seen from Markell — he's a straight talker, genuine, smart and dynamic. To me, he represents everything that the Minner-Carney administration does not.

I'm looking for leadership that is more progressive and clear thinking than the murkiness the past eight years have failed to offer us.

I think Markell is the way to go.

Markell far and away the best candidate

Jessica Riggelman
Newark

Jack Markell is far and away the best person to be our next governor. He has the leadership experience we need and the new ideas that will make Delaware a national leader.

His energy plan will seek to make Delaware a leader in renewable energy in the United States while decreasing our reliance on foreign oil and fossil fuels.

His plan for Delaware's schools and students is aimed to help improve our schools and make sure our children are prepared to go on to college and enter the workforce.

He created the Delaware Money School, which offers free classes to Delawareans throughout the year on topics such as saving for college and retirement planning.

Jack's record of cutting costs, saving money, creating jobs and being an effective leader is what we need in Dover.

With Jack Markell, we won't have to hang our heads in shame at the latest scandal erupting on the front page of newspaper every other month. He has the ideas and change we need, and the experience we can trust.

effect on the environment, the last pre-construction administrative requirement, has been completed by the State Division of Highways and now is being reviewed by the U.S. Department of Transportation's regional office in Baltimore.

The connector, designed to relieve traffic congestion on South College Avenue, will start slightly north of Park Drive in Silverbrook, cross Chrysler Corp. property, ascend over the Christina Creek and the B & O Railroad tracks, and join Elkton Road 2,000 feet north of its intersection with Otts Chapel Road. Construction of the connector will cost an estimated $13.2 million.

Half-built tower irks Brookside

The "Brookside Tower" has again aroused the wrath of New Castle County officials.

The County complaints office has ordered the building's owner, Broad Management

Inc., of Great Neck, N.Y., to secure the building, after two teenagers reportedly climbed onto the four-story structure one night last week and began swinging from the rafters.

Meanwhile, the building's owner says a sale of the building may be in the offing, and the transaction could include Towers Department Store and Burger King.

Cutting food costs now and in the future

By MARIA PIPPIDIS

SPECIAL TO THE NEWARK POST

Most of us are feeling the financial crunch of skyrocketing fuel and food prices.

Many families are driving less to conserve gas, but no one wants to jeopardize good nutrition and health to save money. Through planning, budgeting and food selection, you can spend less but still eat well.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Americans spend more than 40 percent of their income on food away from home.

To identify areas where you can cut spending, keep a running tab of all the money you spend on fast food, restaurants or snacks and beverages from vending machines, convenience stores and concession stands. Then use the information to figure out ways to do the same thing at less cost.

If Friday night is pizza night, for example, purchase a frozen pizza rather than ordering out. Whatever the favorite meal is, do some planning to find a suitable, less expensive alternative that can be prepared at home.

If ease and convenience is the issue, look for heat-and-serve alternatives at the grocery store. Although they can be more expensive than preparing meals from scratch, these items are still usually less expensive than going out to eat.

If you find that your family members snack from the vending machines at work or school, purchase the same types of snacks at the supermarket, or better

Kids try to punt, pass and kick their way to victory

By JOSH SHANNON

Approximately 60 kids put their football skills to the test in the National Football League's official Punt, Pass and Kick competition at the Western Family YMCA on Aug. 23.

Free and open to boys and girls between the ages of 8 and 15, the event is one of the hundreds of Punt, Pass & Kick (PP&K) contests the National Football League sponsors across the country each year.

Winners of the local events move on to further rounds, with the competition culminating in the top performers competing during halftime of an NFL play-off game.

Joe Tortorella, of Bear, said he brought his son Ryan, 12, to the competition because it had a family atmosphere and gave Ryan a chance to play sports with children of the same age. "He's a very active kid," Tortorella said. "It's better than sitting home and watching cartoons."

The participants were split into groups by age and gender, and each child was given an opportunity to demonstrate a pass, a punt and a place kick. The three distances were totaled and the participant with the greatest total distances in each group now move on to compete against winners from other local contests in Delaware and Pennsylvania in October.

The PP&K competition was established in 1961, but last Saturday was the first time the Western Family YMCA on Kirkwood Highway has hosted the event, said youth support director Brian Hamill.

Darryl Wade, of Middletown, said he brought his 12-year-old son Darius to the contest to give him a chance to demonstrate his football skills. Darius, who won first place in his age bracket, currently plays football for a youth league and plans to pursue the sport in high school.

"He has a passion for it," Wade said.

Twelve-year-old Hallie Bouldon, of Elkton, Md., said she prefers softball and cheer-leading, but learned to play football while playing in the backyard with her younger brother, Phillip, who also competed in the PP&K.

Because she was the only girl in her age bracket, Hallie automatically advanced to the next level of the contest. She said she wished more girls had signed up.

"They definitely should have — to show up the boys," she said.

Ryan Tortorella, a three-year veteran of the PP&K, said he enjoys the event, especially the passing portion.

"It's fun, and I like to show other people what I can do," he said.

Ryan, who also plays soccer and baseball, said he wants to be a professional athlete and possibly play in the NFL.

"I can sort of imagine it," he said.

Ryan said his father taught him how to play sports.

When asked if he thought he could best his father in a passing contest, Ryan thought about it, smile and replied, "Maybe it would be a tie."

Eight Newark organizations receive grants from state

By PATRICIA E. LANG

NEWARK POST CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Eight Newark-based organizations are among the 88 community, education and art groups across the state to share $1.65 million in annual grants recently dispersed by the Delaware Division of the Arts.

The Newark Arts Alliance received a grant for nearly $16,000, which alliance director Terry Foreman said would be used to cover operating costs such as rent, utilities and insurance.

Foreman said about $5,000 of the total grant amount was awarded to the alliance for its work with low-income families through projects like "Camp Imagine" or "Art to Go", which bring free art projects to area parks, schools and community centers.

"We're very fortunate to get that money, since it's very competitive," Foreman said.

Roxanne Stanulis, communications coordinator for the state division of the arts, said volunteer review panels judge the grant applications. The panels, which are made up of artists and community members, then make recommendations to the state arts council.

Delmarva Discussions, which has been facilitating scholar-led book discussions since 1984, was awarded a grant of $3,250 for its "Reading the Arts" program.

"Reading the Arts" combines three to five reading and discussion sessions with writing exercises, so participants can learn to write in the style of literature they have read and discussed.

Project Director Bethany Hacker said the division of the arts' grant would help Delmarva Discussions expand its programs to more sites throughout the state. She said some of the money also would be used to purchase books for a new program on writing mysteries.

The Chesapeake Silver Cornet Brass Band, a 12-year-old group that performs a varied repertoire of contemporary and traditional brass band music throughout the Mid-Atlantic region, received a grant for $2,500.

According to band president Larry Cole, the grant money will be used to help cover the cost of transportation, music purchases, CD production and hall rentals, as well as instrument purchases and repairs.

Cole said the band's largest expense in 2009 would be travel costs for the North American Brass Band Association competition in Louisville, Ky.

The City of Newark also received a grant from the division of the arts this year totaling $4,500.

Assistant City Parks and Recreation Director Joe

Spadafino said Newark Nite, Liberty Day, Winterfest, the city's spring concert series and Community Day all benefit from the grant award, which helps cover the cost of hiring performers and renting a sound system.

Other grant award winners from the Newark area include Mid-Atlantic Ballet, which received $17,150 to help hire faculty and guest instructors; Newark Symphony Orchestra, which received $6,910 to help pay the salaries of a conductor, a business manager and a handful of soloists, as well as cover the cost of renting performance and rehearsal space; the Chapel Street Players, which received $6,700; and the Delaware Dance Company, which received grants totaling $40,310.

Funding for the division of the arts' grant awards is provided by the state legislature and grants from the National Endowment for the Arts.

then prepare smaller portions in grab-and-go sized containers.

To save time, prepare sandwiches or lunch food ahead of time and then freeze them. Make enough for a week or so, and then in the morning when you pack lunches, just pull them out of the freezer.

Everyone has items in the back of their freezer, fridge or pantry that have been there a while. Take an inventory and think about what meals you could make using what you already have. Be inventive and create a "pantry surprise" meal.

Check grocery store ads for specials and plan meals for a week at a time around the best bargains. Save your meal plans and rotate them throughout the month.

Make a shopping list and shop only once a week. The more you frequent supermarkets, the more likely you are to spend on impulse purchases.

Check out local farmers' markets or produce stands for fresh fruits and vegetables. Buying local produce stretches your dollar and lowers food safety risks.

You can freeze or preserve fresh fruits and vegetables for later. This will allow you to add variety to your future meal planning. To learn how to freeze or can food properly, visit the New Castle County Cooperative Extension's Web site www.ag.udel.edu/extension.

Do not waste food. Store food right away to preserve freshness or freeze to prevent spoiling. Serve children smaller portions to prevent waste. Plan to incorporate leftovers in future meals or bag lunches, or just freeze them for later use.

It's not too late to plant fall crops like spinach, lettuces, arugula, leeks and radishes. These vegetables prefer cooler weather and can be planted in containers.

The University of Delaware's publication "101 Ways to Cut Grocery Costs" is available online at www.ag.udel.edu/extension/fcs/moneymanagement.htm and provides practical suggestions for cutting costs.

Get the family involved in this project, too. Their assistance with food preparation will save you time and allow you to spend some quality time in the kitchen together.

Student victims of armed robbery beaten on street

Three University of Delaware students were robbed at gunpoint in downtown Newark last week in a vicious attack that included the stomping and choking of two female victims.

According to police, the students were robbed on Haines Street as they walked to the 7-11 on East Delaware Avenue at approximately 1:15 a.m.

During the assault, a heavy-set black woman, described as being between 17 and 20 years old with a tattoo running the length of her right arm, reportedly threw one of the female victims to the ground, while a second black woman stomped on the victim's back until she released her purse.

A black man, also described as being between 17 and 20 years old, with short hair, reportedly produced a handgun and pointed it at a male victim while demanding he turn over money.

A second female victim was reportedly choked and thrown to the ground by a fourth black female who then made off with the victim's purse, police said.

All four suspects ran to a vehicle in a parking lot on Haines Street and fled the area.

Police said the victims did not sustain injuries that required medical attention.

Newark Police Lt. Brian Henry said the victims reported that they and their attackers had attended the same party on East Main Street earlier in the evening.

"We do see an increase in these types of crimes when college students start returning for fall classes," Henry said. "This time of year, there's a large increase in the victim base, for lack of a better term, and the suspects know it."

Henry said the department is bolstering its nighttime patrols to deter strong-arm robberies and other crimes that frequently occur on the streets of Newark once the University of Delaware is back in session.

"We take the same initiative in the spring when the weather warms up and the students are out later," he said.

Anyone with information about the robbery is asked to contact Detective Scott Rieger of the Newark Police Department at 366-7110 ext. 133 or call Crime Stoppers at 1-800-TIP-333.

Senior laden Jackets have high hopes

By JON BUZBY

JONBUZBY@HOTMAIL.COM

Newark High School boasts 10 state championships, nine of them under head coach Butch Simpson, who is entering his 32nd season at the helm of the Yellowjacket football program. Delaware's all-time winningest coach (244) has 31 seniors returning for the 2008 season, which is creating a familiar buzz at The Hive.

"If we reach our potential, and it's my job to get us there, this season we will be very competitive," Simpson said. "These seniors have big goals."

According to Simpson, most of the key losses from last year's 6-5 team that lost to Glasgow in the first round of the state tournament were on the offensive side of the ball.

"The core of the 12 seniors we lost was pretty significant," Simpson said.

The good news is that Rutgers-bound Malcolm Bunche (6-6, 315) returns for his senior season to anchor both the offensive and defensive lines. Bunche is a returning starter and will try to fill the role left by two-way All-State lineman, Chad Davis, who is now wearing a Blue Hen uniform.

Simpson will call on quarterback Austin Bartley (6-2, 186) to make the transition from wide receiver to signal-caller and run the Yellowjackets' spread offense, a strategy Simpson is incorporating due to the team's depth and experience at the running back position.

"Most of our depth and playing experience is at running back," Simpson said, "so we want to incorporate those fine athletes into the offense as much as we can."

Bartley's receiving corps

Senior Brandon Norwood (5-9, 175) will start in Newark's backfield for the third-consecutive season. In addition, Shaun Thomas (6-1, 171), Kendall Daniels (5-8, 163), and Aaron Tyson (5-10, 175) all return for their senior season touting plenty of experience carrying the ball. Glasgow transfer Brandon Lately (5-9, 173) hopes to finish his playing career seeing some time in the backfield as well.

will be led by senior Kendall Poole (6-2, 198), who will also see action at defensive end. Others competing for playing time are WR/DE Ryan Johnson (Sr., 6-6, 193) and WR/DB Micah Thomas (Soph., 5-8, 132). WR/DB John May (Sr., 5-11, 170), a transfer from Pencader Charter, hopes to see significant playing time.

Defensively, senior Laro Washington (5-6, 155), who led the team in tackles last season, returns at linebacker alongside senior Kenny Chandler (6-2, 210), a third-year starter. The Yellowjackets will also count on several of their offensive skill-position players to shine on the defensive side of the ball.

"My coaching staff has been with me for a long time to build the continuity in this program," Simpson said. "When kids play here, they know what to expect."

If you are game experienced, which we are this season, expectations are higher."

Newark will find out early if their senior-laden team can compete with the best when they open at home against Salesianum Sept. 5.

Blue Hens set to open at Maryland Saturday

By TOM TOMASHEK

TTOMASHEK@COMCAST.NET

Last fall when Appalachian State defeated nationally-ranked Michigan, major colleges throughout the nation were placed on alert. If it could happen in Ann Arbor, it could happen anywhere.

Certainly, University of Delaware football coach K.C. Keeler is conceding nothing to the University of Maryland when his Football Championship Subdivision (formerly Division I-AA) Blue Hens travel to College Park Saturday, but he also doesn't expect to surprise the Terrapins, members of the Bowl Championship Series (I-A) Atlantic Coast Conference.

"I'd be surprised if we don't get Maryland's 'A' game," Keeler said earlier this week. "What Appalachian State did last year for I-AA football was good in some ways, but it also limited the opportunity for any of us [in I-AA] to sneak up on I-A schools."

Logic tells you that when FCS schools step up, they are at a disadvantage for a couple reasons. They have 63 scholarships compared to 85 allocated to BCS schools. And in the vast majority of cases, the lower-division school is playing on the road, just as Division II West Chester always plays the Blue Hens in Delaware Stadium.

But it is fair to say that Appalachian State did a great deal for its peers in terms of image and confidence. Once a sacrificial means for I-AA coaches to pad their budgets by allowing big-time schools to pound on their young men for a couple hundred thousand dollars, many I-AA coaches actually expect to be at least competitive when they step up in class.

"It's still a case of 63 scholarships [for Division I-AA] versus 85 [for I-A]," said Keeler who might have added that major-college teams have fashioned a 56-15 record in inter-divisional play since 1997, "but Appalachian State showed that if the circumstances are right that even the best major college teams can be beaten."

Lest anyone forget, the Colonial Athletic Association – the 12-team fold of which Delaware is a member – has fared respectably in recent season against major college programs. Examples of recent CAA success include last year's Delaware victory over bowl-bound Navy, while New Hampshire, Villanova, and Richmond each have at least one victory against higher-division schools in the last several seasons.

"We've got some pretty good players at this level," Keeler said "Our conference is ranked ahead of the [major college] Mid-American Conference in the Sagarin ratings and anybody in this league can beat anyone."

Delaware finished behind James Madison and Richmond in the CAA South last season, but reached the FCS championship game. Four other CAA teams qualified for the FCS Tournament.

This week, Delaware is one of seven CAA teams playing major college opponents. In addition to Delaware versus Maryland, the CAA schedule includes James Madison at Duke, Villanova at West Virginia, Hofstra at Connecticut, Maine at Iowa, Northeastern at Ball State, and Towson at Navy. Next week, Richmond will be at Virginia, New Hampshire at Army, and William & Mary will travel to North Carolina State.

"I'd be surprised if James Madison doesn't beat Duke," Keeler said discussing the league's preseason favorite. "James Madison is a very physically-talented team. They have been using [Coach Mickey Matthews] system for a long time."

Looking at Delaware's 3:45 p.m. engagement Saturday in Byrd Stadium, the Blue Hens own a 5-3-1 series advantage over the Terps, but the two UD victories and the tie occurred more than 100 years ago. Maryland has won the last three games – the last one played in 1948 – and in 1947 Maryland snapped Delaware's 32-game winning streak. Maryland is not ranked in any BCS Top 25 while Delaware has been consistently ranked in this season's various national polls, including ninth in the Sports Network poll.

Maryland is coming off a 6-7 season, with the Terps hindered by a series of injuries. They did, however, defeat Villanova in their opener, 31-14, and qualified for a bowl game in which they lost to Oregon State 21-14.

"They have 30 seniors and a large number of their starters back," Keeler said of Maryland. "We're obviously aren't the same team we were a year ago, but as you can see we have some pretty good players."

The Delaware-Maryland game will be televised live on ESPNU and broadcast by two area stations, WDSB, 94.7 FM and WVUD, 91.3 FM.

Free MS assessments to be offered at UD this fall

By AMY WILLIAMS

NEWARK POST CONTRIBUTING WRITER

This fall, the University of Delaware's physical therapy department will be offering another series of free Multiple Sclerosis assessments to help those suffering from the life-altering disease.

"Multiple Sclerosis is considered a neurological degenerative disease," Cathy Ciolek, the new director of the university's

MS clinic explained. "Multi-disciplinary assessments help people to understand the disease's progression and recognize when they may need additional services, equipment or an update to their exercise program to keep them functioning at the optimal level."

The University of Delaware, in partnership with the Delaware Multiple Sclerosis Society, has been offering the free assessment clinics for the past five years. The MS assessment program is designed for Delaware clients who have noticed some level of functional loss and those who have not had an MS assessment in the last couple of years.

Experts and professionals in counseling, home medical equipment, vision, nutrition and several other fields conduct the assessments and then make recommendations for improvement.

"The assessments may include an exercise program, suggestions for changes in their diet to more healthy foods, changes in their visual aids, adaptive equipment, and so on," Ciolek said. "If the individual participants need skilled services, they are referred to the appropriate professionals for follow up."

Multiple Sclerosis affects more than 400,000 people in the United State, including more than 1,350 Delaware residents.

All members of the Delaware MS Society are eligible for the free assessments and are encouraged to attend.

The assessments will be held on Sept. 19, Oct. 17 and Nov. 21.

There are a limited number of appointments available and the slots will fill up quickly, Ciolek said.

Little Sisters' senior home receives big check from Maryland foundation

By SCOTT GOSS

POSTNEWS@CHESUPUB.COM

A Roman Catholic women's order that assists impoverished seniors in New Castle County received a major contribution this week from one of the largest charitable foundations in the country.

On Aug. 27, the Harry and Jeanette Weinberg Foundation of Owings Mills, Md. — one of the 22 largest charitable foundations in the nation — signed over a $422,000 check to the Jeanne Jugan Residence, an 80-bed senior care facility on Salem Church Road operated by the Little Sisters of the Poor.

Duke Doblick, the director of development for the Little Sisters, said the foundation's gift is the single largest donation the organization has received in its drive to raise $10 million for capital improvements at the 30-year-old facility. "It's really a tremendous donation and we're thrilled to have the foundation's support," Doblick said.

The fundraising effort is intended to help cover the cost of upgrading the residence with more cost-effective utilities, including the replacement of more than 600 windows, Doblick said.

The Jeanne Jugan Residence, which is named after the founder of the Little Sisters of the Poor, provides long-term care to about 80 low-income New Castle County residents over the age of 60.

The facility is run by 10 members of the Little Sisters of the Poor, as well as a full- and part-time staff of about 115 people, Doblick said.

The Jeanne Jugan Residence is one of 33 senior care facilities in the country and one of 250 in the world operated by the order.

"It's a great place that is really way ahead of other residence care facilities in the country," said Michael Marcus, program director of older adult services for the Harry and Jeanette Weinberg Foundation.

"The residence offers a continuum of services under one roof to people living independently and those in need of intermediate care," he said. "The home offers its residents lots of engagement, from religious to social to volunteer activities, which represents a culture change from the stereotypical residential care facility."

Doblick said the donation from the Weinberg foundation brings the Jeanne Jugan Residence to within 20 percent of its overall fundraising goal.

Harry Weinberg, who founded the Weinberg Foundation in 1959, immigrated to the United States at the age of four and receive no education beyond the sixth grade, yet managed to assist Jews reach a safe haven here in the 1930s on his way earning a small fortune. At one point, Weinberg was the largest landowner in Hawaii, according to the foundation.

Today, the foundation has assets of approximately $2 billion, of which it donates roughly $120 million a year, including $40 million specifically targeted to organizations that serve older adults and the poor.

allows Newark to pass the cost of spikes in the wholesale electricity market on to its customers.

McFarland said the city held off on adding the PPCA to customer's bills when wholesale electricity prices first started to spike in May and June in the hopes that the market would become less volatile, thereby making a rate increase unnecessary.

"We try not to jerk the rate around excessively," he said. "But in July we were told the spike is persisting and we realized that we would have to raise the rate fairly quickly in order to meet our budget projections for the year."

McFarland said that without the rate adjustment, the rising cost of purchasing electricity wholesale could have resulted in a $2 million shortfall in this year's anticipated revenue from electricity sale of about $50 million.

"Because the purchase cost can vary considerably from month to month, the city charter allows us to pass the increased cost onto our customers dollar for dollar each month," he said.

City officials said factors that have increased the city's wholesale purchase and delivery costs include higher oil costs, high congestion and higher consumption among members of the Delaware Municipal Electric Corporation (DMEC), which sells electricity to the city.

Newark community affairs officer Dana Johnston said all the members of DMEC are expected to respond to the higher cost of wholesale electricity by raising rates.

"Despite the increase in rates for the City of Newark, the city is reasonably confident that its electric rates will still compare favorably to those of other providers in the state," she said. "Before this rate increase, the City of Newark's electric rates were 7 percent lower than Delmarva's rate and 10 to 18 percent lower than other towns in the state."

Prior this month, the city had last increased its electricity rates since July 2006.

DAPSS students required to meet DSTP standards

of a narrow curriculum focusing on security jobs.

However, a study released by the Manpower Demonstration Research Corp. in June showed that students from career schools earn $2,088 more per year than students from other schools eight years after students from both schools have graduated. Male at-risk students reportedly earned 17 percent more than other students.

The study, which began in 1993, also showed that twelfth grade students in schools that combine academics, career studies, mentoring and work experience were more likely to remain in school, attend more regularly and earn more credits toward graduation. Participants in the study were mostly black and Hispanic students.

Delaware's legislature made DAPSS one of four exemptions from a resolution establishing a moratorium on new charter school applications in the final days of their 2008 session.

New Castle Attorney Thomas Little, project manager for the academy, told legislators that planning for the charter school had been underway for a year-and-a-half and that the school was ready to begin a one-year certification process.

Little signed a contract in March with Innovative Schools, a professional firm that will coordinate the process of finding and funding a DAPSS site for as many as 600 students in Wilmington's inner city.

Innovative Schools began operating in 2002 to assist charter schools with the purchase, construction, or renovation of school facilities. It already counts other local charter schools among its clients, including Maurice J. Moyer Academy, Newark Charter School and Gateway

Lab School.

In June, the academy's founding board announced the hiring of a school leader, Orval L. Foraker Jr., to work with DAPSS as they complete their charter application, which is to be submitted to the Delaware Department of Education in December.

Foraker, a native of Delaware, has worked in the state's public school system for 31 years and said he is excited about the opportunity to lead the DAPSS school concept.

"I believe that DAPSS's desire to provide real-life, first responder career training, combined with high academic standards and educational motivation through the use of mentors for Delaware's students is admirable and will be a huge success," he said. "DAPSS is in a unique position as the first career academy in the state of Delaware, as well as the first high school in the nation preparing students for careers as First Responders. I'm pleased to join the DAPSS board in their efforts to make this school a reality."

Charter schools in Delaware receive operating funds from the state and the local school district based on the number of students they enroll.

Although public charter schools have individual academic programs, their curriculum must align with the Delaware Content Standards and their students still participate in the Delaware Student Testing Program.

Curriculum choices for students at the academy, who are to be called cadets, range from SWAT (Special Weapons and Tactics) to prison guard, water rescue, paramedic, fireman, professional demolition and emergency response operator, according to a statement by its founding board.

Parents must agree to attend a monthly meeting at the campus for progress conferences. To meet personal curriculum goals, all physically capable cadets are to attend a daily after-school exercise program.

In addition, two hours of after-school sports or homeland security training will be available for cadet volunteers.

Fred Fitzgerald, a retired Marine captain who has been teaching English, speech and debate at New Castle Christian Academy, was named the school's first principal. Fitzgerald is also a former executive for Coca Cola in Jacksonville, Fla., and a former director of operations for the Port of Wilmington.

Biden's selection as VP good for Del.

► UPFRONT, from 1

access we have to our elected officials. It certainly makes them more real to us and maybe even helps us relate to them more.

From all accounts - local and national - Biden lobbied hard for his selection. He beat out Indiana Sen. Evan Bayh and Virginia Sen. Tim Kaine, who appeared to be the last two that Obama considered. Sen. Hillary Clinton's name was also bandied about.

But in his 90-minute secret meeting with Obama Aug. 6 in Minneapolis, Biden presented all of his benefits.

Those benefits became even greater a few days later when war broke out between Georgia and Russia and Biden was asked by the Georgian president to visit and give some advice.

That certainly makes an impression on a candidate who's been criticized for a lack of experience in foreign affairs.

The race will begin for real after the Democratic and Republican conventions are completed. Then for eight or nine weeks we'll see Biden and Obama - along with Republican Sen. John McCain and his running mate - take center stage.

Part of that stage will include Delaware. It's a stage that the state's never been on and it will be nice to see how we hold up.

Now, if I can only find some old pictures of Sen. Biden, we'll be off to a good start.

Mrs. Markell stumps at senior center

► MARKELL, from 3

take advantage of the state's low taxes and lower cost of living.

"This shows that these are issues we really need to face," she said. "By 2030, our population of seniors will increase by 134 percent."

During the hour-long visit, Markell briefly addressed the few dozen people gathered in the cafeteria and then toured the center to visit with other members.

She emphasized that one of her husband's main issues is health care.

"He wants health care to be a right, not a privilege, for everyone," she said.

Jack Markell's plan would require those who can afford it to purchase minimum coverage and would use state funds to subsidize coverage for the poor.

During her visit, Carla Markell referred most questions about her husband's policies to "Blueprint for a Better Delaware," a book of campaign platforms he published in June.

According to the book, Markell would lower the cost of prescription drugs by encouraging employers and insurance companies to pool their drug purchases in order to get a lower price, and by urging doctors to submit prescriptions electronically, which would decrease the extra costs incurred from prescription errors.

He also has pledged to create policies based on a "new view of aging" that values the experience of seniors and encourages them to volunteer and mentor others.

Joyce Baumann, a member and volunteer at the senior center, said she appreciated Carla Markell's visit, although she remained a bit skeptical.

"Being the wife, of course she's going to say he's wonderful," she said.

Baumann said she is most concerned with the economy. She said high gas prices are limiting the amount of volunteer work she can do for the center.

She said she has not yet decided who will get her vote for governor.

"Whoever is going to help me is who I help," she said.

Lopata is first city manager candidate to meet the public

Richard M. Finn, who most recently worked as the city manager for Takoma Park, Md. met with city residents after the Newark Post's deadline on Wednesday.

Kyle R. Sonnenberg, the assistant city manager for Fayetteville, N.C., will introduce himself to residents during a meet-and-greet session from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Aug. 28.

City council has asked residents who attend the meet-and-greet sessions to e-mail council members with their input by Sept. 1.

Council is slated to meet behind closed doors to discuss the job candidates and their performance during this week's public meetings on Sept. 2.

Lopata is widely considered to be the front-runner in the city manager search. A 33-year employee of the city, he served as Newark's planning director for 31 years before being tapped to serve as the interim city manager after the previous jobholder, Carl Luft, retired in February.

A native of the Bronx in New York City, Lopata grew up in a five-story walk-up and was the first member of his family to attend college.

Lopata said he first came to Newark in 1972 as a graduate student studying history at the University of Delaware.

"I actually got started (in city government) by accident because I took a job here while I was trying to get a real job teaching history," he said. "After the first few days, I fell in love with the city."

During the public session, Lopata repeatedly stressed his experience with and intimate knowledge of the city's laws, zoning code, policies and history.

"I wrote all the rules on inspections and zoning," he said. "I also have spent a big part of my career working on reinvigorating Main Street and the downtown area."

Lopata also discussed the positives and negatives associated with running a city that encompasses the University of Delaware, which he said has both positive and negative influences on the city.

He said the city has partnered with the university whenever possible and specifically referenced his personal involvement in joint efforts such as the Unicity bus service, a refuse transfer station and the city's use of experts from the university community.

But, he also said the university has had some negative effects on the community, including tensions that have resulted from off-campus housing.

"We have 1,200 single family rentals and they are not necessarily kept up as well as owner-occupied homes," he said. "The university also has meant that the housing market tends to skew upward, which means your houses are more valuable, but it also makes it difficult for young families to afford a home here."

In response to questions from city residents, Lopata said he believes the city can do more to preserve its aging housing stock, improve its environmental sustainability, create a legitimate public transportation system and enhance its code enforcement.

"I am intimately familiar with the intractable issues this city is facing," Lopata said. "You need a lot of experience to deal with these issues and I've been dealing with them for over a generation. This is really my life's blood."

Interim city manager Roy H. Lopata Jr. is one of three candidates for the permanent job.

Students return to a much-changed Newark

▶ CHANGES, from 1

interest in our downtown out there and I think it's gaining a reputation as a place where people want to open their business."

The following is a partial list of some of the most visible new projects that have come to town since university students departed last spring:

• Newark Natural Foods

Downtown Newark's only grocery store has completed a six-month, $500,000 expansion that has nearly doubled the floor space, extended the width of the aisles, replaced the 23-year-old floor and added a new produce cooler and a 20-foot freezer, among other changes. The project also added a community room that will be used for classes and workshops.

• Newark Shopping Center

While students are unlikely to notice anything new at the downtown strip mall, the retail hub is expected to undergo a dramatic transformation over the next five years, according to Spectrum Properties LLC, a Maryland-based firm that purchased the property from Florida-based Regency Centers in a $108.2 million deal that also included six other shopping centers on the east coast.

• Bing's Bakery apartment proposal

Like the shopping center across the street, no visible alterations have occurred at Bing's Bakery, yet a construction proposal unveiled this summer could change that very soon. Newark developer Jeffrey Lang has teamed up with the owners of Bing's to propose a three-story, 20-unit apartment building with commercial space in what is now a vacant, wooded lot next to the bakery. As part of the project, the bakery owners also are hoping to add two apartments on top of their building. The proposal received an unfavorable review from the city planning commission but could still come up for a final vote before city council as early as next month.

• Newark Transit Hub

A $1.2 million project funded by the state and the federal government, the Hub is a new, centralized transfer point for six Delaware Transit Corporation buses and the Newark Trolley. The Hub is located on a new road that connects Delaware Avenue with East Main Street and includes new traffic lights, a new bus shelter and convenient access to Pomeroy Trail, a city bike path that runs through White Clay Creek State Park.

• Bela Place

Located on the site of a former gas station, the construction of this new 2,400-square foot, three-story building, now known as Bela Place, is nearly complete. Owners Gahunia LLC are expected to soon begin renting the building's commercial space on the first floor and its three, two-story apartments.

• Cereal Bowl

This unique new restaurant is expected to begin offering customers a choice of 35 hot and cold cereals with more than 40 toppings, as well as oatmeal smoothies, frozen yogurt, baked goods and coffee some time this fall. The Cereal Bowl is part of four-year-old chain based in Miami, Fla.

• Korner Diner apartments

This summer, diner owner Gus Tsionas won city council approval to tear down the rear portion of Newark's landmark diner so he can construct a three-story building with six, three-bedroom apartments and parking on the first floor. The project also will include new bathrooms and handicapped access to the diner, which is expected to remain open during much of the six to eight-month construction project, which could begin as early as this fall.

• Washington House Condos

Built on the site of the former Stone Balloon, the Washington House's 54 condominiums are nearly complete. It is unknown how many of the condos, which run from $350,000 to $600,000, have been sold, but an open house is planned for Sept. 14. The owners have advertised that a Cusi restaurant will soon open on the first floor and city officials say the establishment has applied for a special use permit to allow alcohol sales.

• 102 E. Main St.

This three-story building owned by Newark developer Jeff Lang is currently undergoing renovations that will allow it to accommodate a 100-seat restaurant on the first floor and a portion of the second floor, as well as 10 apartments occupying the balance of the second and third floors. While the apartments will reportedly be ready for students this fall, there has been no word regarding a tenant to fill the restaurant space.

• The Mill Yard

An 8,700-square-foot, three-story building currently under construction on Elkton Road near the Rodney dormitories, the Mill Yard will include nine loft-style apartments and a restaurant. City officials say Buffalo Wild Wings has requested a special use permit to sell alcohol at the Mill Yard.

• Amstel Square

A 6,000-square-foot building currently under construction on the site of the former Crab Trap restaurant, Amstel Square will house a 60-seat restaurant with an outdoor café and six apartments. No word yet on what type of restaurant plans to locate there.

• Louviers Federal Credit Union

Connecting Children With Nature in Delaware's State Parks

Imagine never seeing a robin build her nest, never rolling down the side of the biggest hill in the valley, never building stone dams in the rain-washed gutter or tiptoeing over a blistering sandy beach. Would your life be any different? Could these simple joys make a difference in your child's life?

Well, as it turns out, they probably can. Research has confirmed that our lifestyles keep us indoors. The result is that people are not getting enough nature, free play and time outdoors. Referred to as "nature-deficit disorder," this trend is impacting the lives of children and families each day.

Richard Louv, author of Last Child in the Woods states that,

"Nature-deficit disorder is not an official diagnosis but a way of viewing the problem, and describes the human costs of alienation from nature, among them: diminished use of the senses, attention difficulties, and higher rates of physical and emotional illnesses. The disorder can be detected in individuals, families, and communities."

How does connecting children with nature benefit you and your family?

Studies have shown that spending time in nature can make children smarter, stronger, healthier, more creative, happier and more focused. It builds community, creates family memories and instills a sense of stewardship that encourages the next generation to protect open spaces for the future.

Delaware State Parks Can Help You Connect with Nature!

We preserve critical natural areas for future generations and thoughtfully maintain open spaces such as woodlands, meadows, beaches, wetlands, trails and urban parks.

We have trained staff to assist park visitors with safety, security and awareness.

Delaware State Parks has teamed up with Nemours Health Prevention Services to promote the Delaware State Parks Trail Challenge. This is another great reason for children to get healthy and win prizes!

We enhance and enrich visitors' experiences in our parks through education and special programs. Here are just a few examples of opportunities that you will find throughout Delaware State Parks this fall and winter:

- Special Events such as Boo at the Zoo, Halloween Haunted Trail, Ghost Tours and Mansion Mysteries.
- Night time programs such as owl prowls, full moon hikes, hayrides and campfires.
- Recreational opportunities such as kayaking, canoeing, pontoon boat tours, hiking, camping, fishing, surfing, swimming, disc golf, field sports, horseback riding, tennis, rock climbing, play grounds, historic reenactments, sledding and cross country skiing.

And...we provide space to rest, relax and renew.

Surround Yourself with Art and History at the Blue Ball Barn

Originally built in 1914 by Alfred I. DuPont, this extraordinary barn is named after the Blue Ball Tavern, an inn and meeting house that once stood near the property. The tavern got its name from the practice during the 18th and early 19th centuries of raising a blue ball attached to a pole out front to signal illiterate stagecoach drivers that passengers were waiting inside to board.

There are several exhibits on display at the Blue Ball Barn, the most prominent of which is the Delaware Folk Art Collection. The works in the collection reflect the local cultures of Delaware. Visitors can tour the exhibit and use the interactive touchscreens to learn about the collection, the artists and their work. The collection currently contains over 120 works from 50 artists. Interpretive displays and Dairy Farm exhibits explore the history of the Blue Ball Barn and surrounding properties.

The beautifully-restored stone building includes modern-day technological features to create the perfect setting for meetings, weddings, and special gatherings. Multifunctional rental space is available for both indoor and outdoor events. The Blue Ball Barn holds the distinction of being Delaware's first public building to be LEED-certified. The Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) rating system has been widely embraced as the environmentally-friendly building design standard. "Green" building practices save money and resources and provide healthier environments for employees and visitors.

The Blue Ball Barn is situated in Alapocas Run State Park, which also features the 27,000 square foot "Can-Do Playground" one of 60 "boundless playgrounds" in the United States and the first in Delaware. Designed to be accessible to every child, regardless of physical, mental and sensory abilities, the playground was made possible with the help of six Wilmington-area Rotary Clubs. Other park features include a 10-foot-wide multi-use trail that runs from Talley Road via the Blue Ball Barn to the Brandywine River, sports fields, and the ruins of the 18th-century Weldin Plantation with historic markers.

For more information about the park or the Blue Ball Barn, call (302) 577-1164 or visit www.destateparks.com.

Garrisons Lake Golf Course To Reopen This Fall

Garrisons Lake Golf course, a popular 160-acre privately operated country club that opened in the 1960s, closed in 2003 after a developer bought the property and announced plans to build 450 homes. Dedicated government officials and the local community persuaded the General Assembly to purchase the property to protect the open space from development.

Prior to the purchase, the course had been neglected, was overgrown, and many of the buildings were in poor condition. The Division of Parks and Recreation retained the Professional Services of Davis, Bowen and Friedel, Architects, and Brian Ault of Ault, Clark and Associates, Golf Course Architects, to complete a renovation design for the course and develop plans to construct support amenities such as utilities, parking, temporary clubhouse/administrative space/food service and a maintenance/cart storage facility. Interestingly enough, Brian Ault is the son of Ed Ault, who designed the original course in the 1960s.

The Delaware Division of Parks and Recreation invested significant resources to renovate the 18-hole course, remodeling the greens and fairways, installing an irrigation system, removing buildings, and building a new clubhouse and roads. The driving range and practice facilities have also been renovated. Selected trees have been removed to improve playability and to promote good air circulation. The Delaware State Golf Association, a private non-profit organization, has entered into a ten-year agreement with the Division to operate and maintain the course.

The reopening of Garrisons Lake as a public golf course will add yet another exciting place where all Delawareans and visitors can enjoy outdoors and recreation in a natural setting without concern that the land will one day be developed.

Ghost Hunters Investigate Fort Delaware

When the cast and crew of Sci-Fi Channel's Ghost Hunters proposed spending a week at Fort Delaware State Park last spring, there wasn't much doubt that they'd find plenty to keep them busy: from spooky noises to actual ghostly encounters, the former Civil War prison has a long history of the kind of weird occurrences that fascinate fans of the paranormal. Ghost Hunters fans had recommended Fort Delaware as a paranormal hotspot, and Fort Delaware's isolated location, on Pea Patch Island in the middle of the Delaware River, was also a plus, offering the advantage of greater security during the shoot. All of this led the show's producers to contact Delaware State Parks and arrange a taping at the Fort for the third week of April.

Lee Jennings, Delaware State Parks Chief of Cultural Resources, gets wired for sound

The Ghost Hunters television show follows members of The Atlantic Paranormal Society (TAPS), a group of paranormal investigators from Warwick, Rhode Island, who visit sites reported to be haunted. Their goal during each investigation is to debunk those claims by finding a normal explanation for the unusual phenomena experienced there; if they can't, their conclusion is that the site is probably haunted.

Led by TAPS founders Jason Hawes and Grant dock, alerted by the presence of the TAPS vans; cast members Wilson and Hawes, along with Steve Gonsalves, Dave Tango, and Kris Williams, were happy to chat with fans and sign autographs just before everyone boarded the boats to the island.

Parks staff quickly learned that shooting a TV show involves a lot of standing around waiting: making the crossing in the lead boat, they arrived at the island and trooped up to the dock, only to look back and see that the second boat carrying most of the cast and crew continued to circle around out in the river. After several minutes, the answer came through over the walkie-talkie – a decision had been made to tape cast members' reactions to Fort Delaware while they were still out on the water. Their boat continued to circle around for close to an hour; once they finally made land and began to unload, TAPS member Tango was noticeably green.

As members of the crew unpacked and set up equipment, Lee Jennings took lead investigators Hawes and Wilson around to various locations where people claimed to have experienced possible paranormal events. These locations would receive special attention throughout the investigation. Although on television it would appear that only Hawes, Wilson and Jennings were in each room, they were in fact accompanied by a small army of park staffers who wanted to watch, and crew members holding lights, cameras and mikes. At each location, Jennings related the stories about unusual events that had been reported there, the ghost hunters asked questions, the camera crew filmed, and the park staff tried not to breathe.

The team spent several nights on the island, from sundown to just before dawn; they also visited the Fort Delaware Society for background information. After the main part of the investigation, while the cast holed up in their hotel rooms to analyze the audio

Ghost Hunters crew sets up at Fort Delaware

From a startling "boom" sounding eerily like a cannon shot that echoed through the Fort one night, to an unexplained "visitor" caught on thermal camera, the week spent at Fort Delaware afforded the TAPS team some of the most interesting footage they'd filmed all season. In fact, the results were so exciting that the powers-that-be at Sci-Fi Channel decided to expand the episode from the 20 minutes originally planned into a full hour, focusing solely on the Fort, and to bill the airing as the show's "mid-season finale." Delaware State Parks staff recently learned that the Ghost Hunters enjoyed their stay at Fort Delaware so much that they're already making plans to come back.

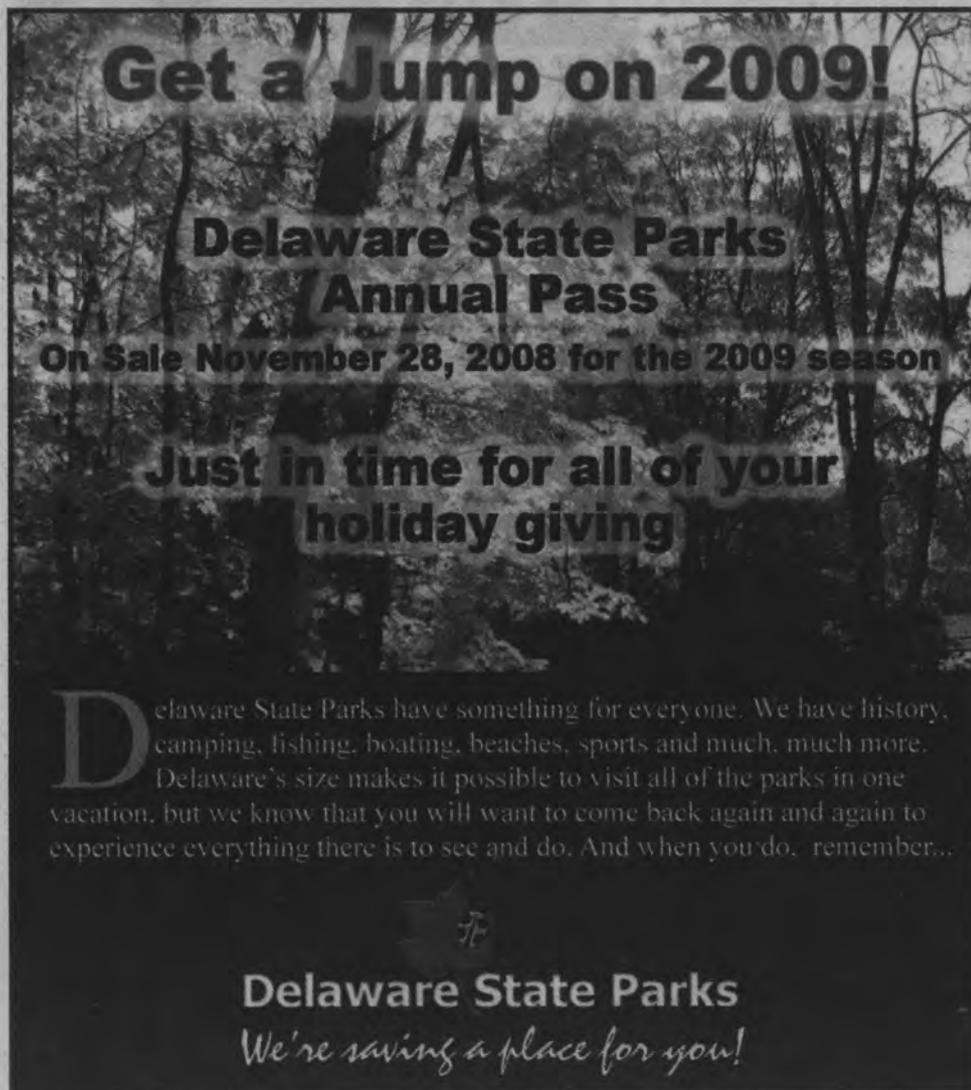

Wilson, the cast and crew drove their signature black vans up to the dock in Delaware City at sunset on April 14th. They were met there by Fort Delaware State Park Superintendent Becky Webb, Chief of Cultural Resources Lee Jennings, and other park staff who would assist them with the shoot during the course of the week. After introductions were made, everyone pitched in to load the supplies and equipment that would be needed for the week – everything from cameras, mikes and booms, to snacks, sodas, hotdogs and a portable grill went onto two workboats for the trip out to the island. By this time, a small crowd had gathered on the in their hotel rooms to analyze the audio and video material they'd taped during the investigation, several members of the camera crew spent a long night out on the island shooting the "B-roll," or "beauty roll" – exterior shots of just the grounds and buildings that would be used in snippets throughout the show when it aired. At the end of the week, Hawes and Wilson wrapped up with a final taping where they presented their findings to Jennings. This "reveal," as it is called, was actually not shot at Fort Delaware, but in an old bunker at nearby Fort Dupont -- it was easier to shoot there than to haul all the equipment back out to the island.
