Newark, Christiana alumni recall a senior class divided in half

For two years, they were proud Yellowjackets. They wore the yellow and black, cheered on Newark High School's football and cross-country squads and attended classes in the modern, new building on Delaware Avenue.

But for their senior year, half of the Class of 1964 was moved to the newly built Christiana High School — located “out in the sticks,” as one alumnus recently described it — and away from their other classmates, many of whom had attended school together since first grade.

“After 11 years of being together, they split us up in the 12th,” Michael Walker, who graduated from Newark, recalled last week. “That saddened a lot of us.”

Over the weekend, '64 graduates of both schools returned to Newark to celebrate their 50th reunion and reminisce about the split that made their class one of the most unique in local school history. They attended a cocktail reception, a reunion dinner and toured both schools.

Massage therapist says work is her 'calling'

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

Shirl Lord had received only one massage in her life when she made the decision to leave the corporate world after 26 years and start a career as a massage therapist. "I remember that massage was the best feeling in the world," she said.

Lord, 58, has since owned and operated a private practice called Body, Mind and Spirit Massage Therapy out of her home in the Catalina Gardens neighborhood for the past 12 years and said she has no regrets about her sudden life change.

"As I got into it, I felt like it was my calling all along," Lord said.

Born in Newark, Lord grew up working in her father's recording studio and attended the University of Delaware to study music education. After a brief move to Ohio, she returned to Newark with her husband and children and continued to work for her father for another 10 years before enrolling in massage therapy school.

"I decided I need to some hard decisions. Sort Lord started her private practice in 2002 and offers a wide range of services from deep tissue massages to orthopedic and sports massages to prenatal massages in 30, 60 or 90 minute sessions in her studio. She can also add in extras like hot stones or heated bamboo upon request.

Over the years, Lord has worked with athletes, business professionals and even UD students stressed over final exams and said massages can help heal sports-related injuries, as well as the typical aches and pains stemming from activities like computer use. In that case, she said the muscles in the front of the neck become shortened, and the back of neck and back are over stretched.

When a clients come in for an appointment, Lord asks them what areas are bothering them and when their last massage was. While massaging through their muscles, she first works on the "fascia," the webbing that holds the body together underneath the skin, and feels for tissues that aren't pliable. She then works to reduce the "congestion" to release the tight spots and allow the stagnant fluid build up on the muscle to disperse.

Lord said her favorite part of her job is when her clients leave happy and pain-free.

"I just love seeing someone walk out feeling better than they did when they walk in," she said. "It's that ahh moment."

That "ahh moment" doesn't just happen for the clients.

Lord said it's just as relaxing for her to be on the other end of the table and give a massage as it is for person receiving it because to her, the studio is her "sanctuary."

She said the one-on-one time with her clients allow her an opportunity to block out everything else and focus.

For Lord, leaving her corporate job in her mid-40s to become a licensed massage therapist was a huge leap of faith, but she said it was one of the best decisions she's ever made because she feels like she's making her father proud.

"My dad he always used to say if you do what you love, you don't work a day in your life and I'm finding this is true," she said. "This is my passion."

This day-in-the-life profile of a massage therapist is the latest installment in the Newark Post's biweekly "Get to Work" series, an in-depth look at some of Newark's working men and women. If you know someone who would make a good Get to Work profile, contact reporter Karie Simmons at ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com.

Shirl Lord has been practicing massage therapy since 2002, when she left her corporate job to follow her passion.

City, church at odds over sprinkler system

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

The city's code enforcement office has been at odds with Pilgrim Baptist Church over a new addition the city claims requires the church to also install a sprinkler system in the existing building in order to comply with Newark code.

Members of the church, founded in 1913 and located on Barksdale Road, believe the code is being incorrectly interpreted by city officials and argue that the two buildings are "separate, distinct structures."

"It was by design that these be two separate buildings," Pastor Lonnie Rector said.

On Tuesday, both parties presented their cases to the Board of Building Appeals with City Solicitor Bruce Herron and Tim Poole, code enforcement officer, arguing in favor of the city, and James A. Landon, an attorney from Morris James, LLP, representing the church.

Three out of the six members of the board were present at the hearing, including Terrence Haskins, Jeff Bergstrom and Sal Sedita.

Work began last year on the two-story, 17,000-square-foot addition to the back of the church for a fellowship hall and additional meeting rooms, classrooms and kitchen, but on Feb. 5, a month before completion, the church received a letter from Planning Director Maureen Feeney Roser stating that sprinklers must be installed in the existing portion of the building.

Feeney Roser explained that the sprinklers needed to be installed before she could issue a Certificate of Occupancy for the addition and gave the church 30 days to comply.

However, on Tuesday, Landon argued that the church is not financially prepared to install the sprinklers and should not be required to do so in 30 days, a time frame he described as "impossible."

He added that the church would be unable to hold regular services if forced to install sprinklers in the existing building, as the worship room would be under construction.

Poole explained to the board that the existing church shares load-bearing elements with the new area, which deems it not only an "addition," but also a "renovation," and triggers the automatic sprinklering requirement. He also noted that the two buildings are connected by a hallway.

"As this is one entire structure and one use, it's continuous, and the entire structure should be provided with the automatic sprinkler protection as required by code," Poole said.

Desmond Baker, engineer and lead project manager on the addition, argued that the two buildings do not share load-bearing elements in the hallway. He said there is a load-bearing wall against the sanctuary side of the existing church and a firewall in the new building.

"It was not called a firewall on the plan," Poole responded, adding that the wall in question has not been sealed by a fire marshal.

Poole said the need for a sprinkler system in the existing building is a safety issue, but Baker argued that without the addition, there would be no need to sprinkle the existing building, as the church has been grandfathered in to comply with current city code. He said the church is currently equipped with smoke detectors and fire alarms and will eventually be sprinkled in a few years once other updates planned for the church are completed.

"Sprinkler systems are designed to protect property," Baker said. "Smoke detection is designed to protect lives."

Unable to come to a decision of whether to side with the city or the church, Bergstrom, Sedita and Haskins asked Herron and Landon to try to reach an alternative agreement.

"I just can't see how we can determine that [Poole] made a mistake," Bergstrom said.

The board voted 3 to 0 to table the discussion and asked both parties to reconvene in 30 days to present their agreement, but not before members of the church congregation broke out into song, filling the council chambers with the sound of hymns and catching the attention of several city employees walking through the building.

Following the three-and-a-half-hour hearing, Rector said he was relieved.

"I think it's for the best," he said. "I'm happy with this ending now."

Editor's note: Volunteers at the Pencader Heritage Museum have been digitizing old Newark City Council meeting minutes. They share excerpts with Newark Post readers in a weekly column.

October 1895: as the first anniversary approached, it was decided to hold a supper at the annual meeting to keep members involved and recruit new members. Cost of supper was not to exceed 5-cents.

On Oct. 21, a horse and vehicle described as a "dead wagon" had been stolen from James Maxwell. The next day, word came that the wagon had been "exchanged" for a dearborn. Today, a dearborn would be recognized as the buckboard in old Western movies. Later, word was received that a horse and dearborn matching those stolen had been located on Willard Avenue in Philadelphia. Ira McLaughlin and County Constable Mote were sent to investigate. Apparently the horse and dearborn were not recovered because much time in the next month was devoted to discussion of hiring a detective.

August 1896 is the next mention of theft - a horse from Arthur Atwell and a wagon and harness from Jno. Worth. Word was received from W. Cummings of Port Deposit, Md., that the horse and wagon had crossed the river, so members took the train to Aberdeen, chased the thief for 20 miles, caught him at Churchville and returned him to Newark jail. Mr. Cummings of Port Deposit was paid a $20 reward for his aid. Constable Mote later reported the thief had escaped on the way to county jail at New Castle when Mote stopped to pick up a pocket knife he saw lying in the road.

License plates stolen from two cars

Police are looking into two separate incidents in which license plates were stolen from parked cars.

According to Newark Police spokesman Cpl. James Spadola, the first theft occurred sometime between 6 p.m. Aug. 1 and 11:45 a.m. Sunday in the 400 block of Stanford Drive when someone removed the rear license plate from a Nissan Sentra.

The second theft occurred sometime overnight between July 31 and Aug. 1 in the unit block of Welsh Tract Road when the rear license plate was taken off a Chevy Malibu.

Spadola said it is unknown at this time if the two incidents are related and police continue to investigate the situation.

Electronics stolen from car in Woods at Louviers

Someone stole a bag of electronics out of the resident's car while it was parked on Fenwick Court in the Woods at Louviers neighborhood, police say.

According to Newark Police spokesman Cpl. James Spadola, the incident was reported Sunday, and the victim told police she was on vacation for two weeks and returned to find a bag in her car had been emptied of its contents.

Spadola said an iPad, Beats by Dre headphones and a Verizon tablet worth a total of $478 had been taken from the bag, and the bag was tossed in the victim's backyard.

He said police continue to investigate the incident but have no suspects at this time.

Father, son charged with stealing washing machine

Police arrested Clarence Clayton, 25, and James Clayton, 50, both of Newark, last week after they attempted to take a washing machine that was outside of a house on Elkton Road, officials said.

According to Newark Police spokesman Cpl. James Spadola, the incident occurred on July 30 at 2 p.m. on the 800 block of Elkton Road when an officer driving west on Elkton Road observed the duo loading the washer into a truck.

Spadola said the officer contacted the resident of the home, who said he did not give anyone permission to take the washing machine.

Both James and Clarence Clayton were asked to put the appliance back and were charged with theft.

$7K in silver lifted from Eleanors Way home

A Newark resident recently reported an expensive collection of silver missing, police say.

According to Newark Police spokesman Cpl. James Spadola, the theft occurred sometime between Jan. 11 and July 20 from the unit block of Eleanors Way in the Deer Run neighborhood off Possum Park Road.

The victims told police that a 10-ounce silver bar worth $300, a 100-ounce silver bar worth $3,000 and 115 American eagle silver coins worth $3,450 had been taken from their closet.

Spadola said there were no signs of a break-in at the home, and police are still investigating the incident.

'Mantrap' snares robbery suspect at Brookside bank

By JOSH SHANNON

jshannon@newarkpostonline.com

A New Castle man robbed a Brookside bank last week but didn't get any farther than the bank's lobby, police said.

Stephen D. Dunfee, 38, was captured by a system called a "mantrap," which electronically locks the interior and exterior doors of the bank, trapping the suspect in the entryway vestibule.

State troopers arrived to find Dunfee trapped and frantically trying to escape from the vestibule, according to Sgt. Paul Shavack, who noted that Dunfee damaged the doors and windows in his attempt to break free.

The incident unfolded at 3:30 p.m. July 31 when Dunfee entered the Citizen's Bank in Chestnut Hill Plaza and handed the teller a note demanding money, Shavack said. The 32-year-old woman complied, and Dunfee attempted to leave with an undisclosed amount of cash.

That's when bank employees remotely activated the mantrap system.

Dunfee was charged with second-degree robbery and criminal mischief.

Wayward pig escaped from Winslow Road pet-sitter

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

A wayward pig is back in the custody of its pet-sitter after making a brief break for freedom through the streets of Newark early Monday morning.

Police responded to Apple Road at 5:33 a.m. after receiving a call that there was a pig in the grass.

According to Newark Police spokesman Cpl. James Spadola, Ofc. Adam Heath arrived on scene and attempted to corral the pig that was wandering the streets near Apple Road.

Spadola said the pig is from Warwick, Md., and was successfully caught within minutes, placed in the back of Heath's police cruiser and taken to a city kennel, where its sitter, a Winslow Road resident, came to pick it up.

Monday's incident is the second in the past two years in which Newark Police has captured a runaway pig. On March 16, 2013, officers responded to a report of a pig on the loose shortly

NAA exhibit showcases Newarkers' favorite artistic works

By SPECIAL TO THE POST

By Andrea Annal

This month's themed exhibit at the Newark Arts Alliance has an unusual twist — no artistic skill is required in order to participate.

Instead of submitting original work, community members were invited to choose a piece of artwork they admire and submit it for exhibition.

"You don't have to be an artist," NAA Executive Director Dennis Lawson said. "You can love and appreciate art. It's a way to participate in the art community."

The exhibit opened this week and will run through Aug. 23. The gallery, located at NAA's headquarters in Market East Plaza on Main Street, is open from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday, with the hours extended until 6 p.m. on Thursdays.

The community art exhibit will be welcomed with a reception tonight from 6 to 8 p.m. Refreshments will be provided.

"They may not be artists themselves," artist Karen Berstler said. "But they can bring in pieces from their collection they love and talk about art."

For this year's community art gallery, Berstler chose John Singer Sargent's "Corfu Light and Shadow."

"It's so colorful and so beautiful," she said. "It reminds me of laying on a hammock on the beach."

Yolanda Chetwynd, a member of the Newark Arts Alliance for 20 years, described the community art gallery as a way to show others works of art people would not normally get the chance to see.

"The idea is to show one work you really admire," she said. "This is the one show a year to show others."

Chetwynd chose sculptures of women by Nicholas Monro for this year's exhibition.

"I thought they were really beautiful," she said. "I wanted the community to see them. Otherwise, they wouldn't unless they were a few of my friends at my house."

The event allows artists and art lovers to show off their favorite pieces.

"I think it's really a nice idea to give people who are not artists the chance to show the work they had or have inherited," Chetwynd said.

Local artist Dragonfly Leathrum poses with a piece of artwork she submitted for the community art gallery. The gallery allows Newarkers to exhibit work from other people they admire.

Newark woman publishes first in series of children's books

By ANDREA ANNAL

Special to the Post

Like many authors waiting for the opportunity to be published, K.A. Steed made a living down another path.

"I graduated from Virginia Tech with my master of science and bachelor of science degrees," she said. "I live in Newark and work for a biotechnology company."

However, Steed's favorite hobby finally has been realized. Her book, "We Can't Do It," the first in a series for children, is now on sale in bookstores nationwide.

"I have written since I was a little kid," she said. "Music, stories, anything."

The "We Can't Do It" series will follow school children over the course of time, so those reading will continue to identify with the characters.

"We will get to walk through school and school issues," Steed said. "Children will get to grow up with the characters."

While the process may take some time, Steed will continue to write for children and may move into other genres.

"I could write for children forever," she said. "I may expand into other genres but will definitely continue to write for children. I have many other book ideas, I'm just waiting for the best time to release each story."

Steed said she finds inspiration in her everyday life.

"I draw inspiration from everything," she said. "Everything in life is telling us a story, if we are able to be still and listen for it."

Even though children's books are not very long, the writing and publication process are somewhat lengthy, Steed said.

"The publication process is longer than you might think," she said.

"For most children's books, the process can take anywhere from one to three years. This book took about 15 months to complete."

Though time consuming, the process is fascinating, Steed said.

"It's so exciting to watch the process, see the completed book and share it with the world," she said.

City-sponsored blood drive draws positive turnout

By KARIE SIMMONS

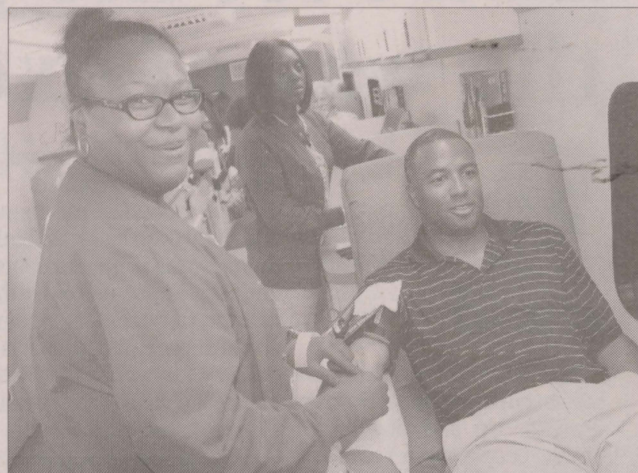

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

Paula Ennis decided to take a break from work July 31 to donate blood in memory of her father.

"He passed away earlier this year and he received blood donations while in the hospital, so this is my chance to give back," she said.

Ennis, a recreation supervisor in the city's parks and recreation department, was one of the many city employees and residents who came out to participate in a city-sponsored blood drive in front of the Newark Municipal Building as part of the Blood Bank of Delmarva's summer blood challenge.

Ennis said that the event was not only convenient, but the free food was also a good bonus.

"I already had my sandwich and I'm going to get my ice cream once my fifteen minutes are up," she said as she sipped water and recovered in the Blood Bank truck.

Carolyn Molitor, who works in the city's electric department, said she donates blood four to five times a year and was just as excited as Ennis about the concept of the event.

ice cream," she said. "I think more people should come out."

"The picnic-style atmosphere is pretty creative," added Mark Neimeister, an employee in the public works and water resources department.

City parking administrator Marvin Howard donated blood for the first time and, although nervous, he said he decided to come out because he likes helping others.

Howard said he was impressed with how many of his coworkers he saw participating in the event.

"I think we had a good turnout," he said. "I mean, I don't know the numbers, but everyone seemed pretty excited about the blood drive."

Noah Osner, lead blood collection technician for the Blood Bank, said the turnout was "fantastic."

"We are running at max capacity with donors, which is great for the blood bank," he said.

According to Andrew Haines, assistant city manager, the blood drive could accommodate 40 people, and all those spots were filled. Some walk-ups had to be turned away, he said.

Osner attributed the turnout to the city's unique concept of food and fun that seemed to entice donors to come out and give back.

"They've really turned this into a real community event," Osner said.

Haines said that he hopes to repeat the event next year, and now that he knows the first year was successful, the city will plan to be able to accommodate more donors.

Vintage clothing store adopts modern business model

Clothes in the Past Lane to go online-only

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

It's been less than a year since Sandi Patterson moved her Clothes in the Past Lane store from 56 E. Main St. to 77 E. Main St. in order to pair her vintage boutique with a new "blow-dry bar" operated by Gloss Salon.

Now, Patterson is moving again, but this time she's going from a brick-and-mortar store to the largest store of all—the Internet.

"Online will allow me to go a whole lot bigger with the vintage, and that really is my love," she said.

Patterson said the separation between Clothes in the Past Lane and Gloss is "amicable," as the two are now going in separate directions after working together for the past seven months. Gloss will be transitioning from a "blow-dry bar" to a full salon, similar to its Wilmington shop, making it no longer a good fit for Patterson's boutique.

Patterson said her vintage line also wasn't moving as well in the new space, and sales in general weren't what they used to be.

"Once we moved across the street, we saw a real change in our customers," she said. "I think the idea was a great idea. A blow dry bar and a boutique, like, wow that is a great idea, but I think in the end it was kind of confusing."

Clothes in the Past Lane moved into Gloss in January after Patterson learned her space at 56 E. Main St. would be demolished along with the former Delaware Book Exchange in order to make room for a new four-story building with 6,980 square feet of retail space on the first floor and 24 apartments on the floors above. The building was eventually leveled last month.

Patterson said she plans to pull all of the clothing out of Gloss and go live with her store online by Oct. 1.

"I just feel like that is where the vintage should have been," she said.

She will still sell TOMS shoes, vintage and new jewelry, handbags, sunglasses and other accessories in the Main Street store as well as at Gloss' Wilmington location and said she plans to remain in-involved with Newark events like Community Day. Local customers will be also be able to try on online purchases and pick up orders at Gloss, which she said is a "win-win."

"It is downsizing to what we're offering in the store, but it's not downsizing as to what we're offering virtually," Patterson said.

Children shouldn't dictate if parents coach

Jon Buzby

My 5-year-old nephew announced that he wanted to play soccer this fall ... "but only if Daddy is the head coach."

I'm sure he's not alone, as it's not unusual for a child to see a friend's dad or mom coaching a team and then want to be in the same situation. And sometimes that desire has nothing to do with X's and O's but rather is just for the security of knowing mom or dad is going to be there.

But what if you don't want to coach? Or don't have the experience to do so? Or, as is often the case, just don't have the time to commit.

I made sure that the first team my son played on was one I didn't coach. I helped out during the practices whenever asked, just like many of the other parents. But when it came time to play the games, I was in the bleachers.

I did this so that when I was able to be an official head coach — and I have been several times after that initial season — it would be because I wanted to do it and had the time to do the job correctly, not because I had to don a whistle and clipboard in order for my child to want to play.

If your child is claiming he will only play if you coach, it might be too early to start him participating in team sports. Or if he's older and knows you won't coach, he might be using his demand as a way to get out of playing. Every child should want to play to enjoy the sport, be with friends, and of course, learn a little bit about the game. And that should happen whether mom or dad coaches or not.

Giving in to your child and agreeing to coach might be setting a bad precedent by setting up expectations that eventually might be impossible to meet for one reason or another.

That being said, a compromise might be to consider the role of an assistant coach, either officially or unofficially. Or do as I did this past spring and be the official scorekeeper. You can promise your child — and the head coach — that you will be at as many practices and games as you can, but have to leave the coaching duties to another parent because you can't make all of them.

Handling the situation this way gives your child the reassurance that you will be there most of the time, but the realization that there will be some practices and games that you can not attend. It's still important for your child to realize he is expected to attend practices on the days when you aren't there, and my guess is once the season starts, you'll find he wants to anyway.

With most kids, provided they enjoy the sports activity, the hardest part is just getting them involved on that first team. Once they get started and realize how much fun youth sports can be, a parent's presence becomes less and less important, no matter the role with the team.

Of course, as parents, sometimes it's hard to face that fact once we are no longer needed. But once we accept it, the youth sports experience becomes more fulfilling for everyone involved — most importantly, your child.

Don't let life get in the way of exercising

Healthy
Newark
Nic DeCaire

As I sat on the deck drinking a cup of coffee, I was amazed. Up and down the street, people were running, jogging, walking, riding bikes and skateboarding.

This was 7 a.m. at the beach, and people were exercising. I am not talking one person — the whole street was covered with moving bodies. Not a car was in sight.

I just kept drinking my coffee.

Day two of my vacation, I walked out on the deck. Yesterday was a fluke, I thought. To my surprise, even more people were out.

Now, I was starting to feel lazy. I was still in my pajamas.

Day three was a repeat of the first two mornings. This time, I put down my coffee and decided to join the masses. I put my daughter in her stroller and headed out.

As I was on my walk, I decided to talk to a few of these vacation-cisers and find out a few things for myself. After chatting about their day and whether they normally vacation in Fenwick, I asked if they normally exercised.

Some looked at me funny, and a few even laughed. I told them I own a fitness center and was impressed with the amount of people exercising on vacation. After all, this is a country known for not being physically active. So what's different about the beach?

Here are my conclusions:

On vacation, people feel like they have more time to dedicate to exercise. One of the biggest reasons people don't exercise is their perceived lack of time. Between work, children, after-school activities, church, television, etc., people do not find time in their day for physical activity.

But exercise doesn't have to eat up a chunk of your day. Results can be earned with as little as 15 minutes of physical activity each day.

At the beach, people feel more relaxed and stress-free. I know when I am stressed, I eat. Most people do. But people on vacation don't have to worry about work or deadlines or ferrying kids to practice or school, so they actually enjoy the thought of physical activity.

Exercise is a great stress reliever. Instead of heading to the pantry next time you feel stressed, do a few pushups and squats.

They want to look good half-naked. At some point, most people at the beach wind up surrounded by strangers. Exercising makes them feel better about their physical appearance and makes the thought of parading around in their swimsuits more comfortable. Appearance can be a great motivator to keep you moving.

As my vacation wound down, I thought the numbers of people exercising began to dwindle. The reality of going back to work and the stress of school and laundry returned. People allowed their everyday lives to get in the way of feeling good about themselves and living a healthy lifestyle.

The majority of people let life get in the way when it comes to exercising. They forget about how good it feels.

My hope is that for some of these vacationers, those couple days of activity were enough to keep the momentum going when they got home.

Or maybe we all should move to the beach, work less and walk around half-naked all the time. Just a thought.

Planning commission OKs new subdivision off Capitol Trail

By KARIE SIMMONS

ksimmons@newarkpostonline.com

On Tuesday night, members of the planning commission gave a developer the green light for plans to subdivide a piece of land off Capitol Trail into four separate lots.

Lisa Goodman, an attorney representing the developer Assadollah Pirestani, said Pirestani intends to create the major subdivision on 305 Capitol Trail, and the single-family homes, once built, will be accessed by a new road called Clara Drive.

Goodman requested that the planning commission provide a positive recommendation to council to allow the developer to extinguish the lot line between two existing parcels at the site and then subdivide them to create three new single-family lots. The existing home fronting on Capitol Trail will remain to create a fourth single-family lot.

A private right-of-way with a private driveway to be known as Clara Drive will serve all four lots, and the existing driveway to the parcel on Capitol Trail will be removed.

Goodman said Pirestani will likely sell the approved lots to a builder who will then construct the houses and therefore did not provide the planning commission with any detailed plans or exact architecture of the future homes, as she said they are not yet known.

Several Newark residents took to the mic Tuesday night to voice their opinions on the proposed project, expressing concerns regarding the potential effects on the environment.

Capitol Trail resident Celeste Kelly said she is worried the homes will be built too close to the floodplain and thinks the value of the surrounding houses will be negatively affected by the erosion.

She said the open lot is too small for three homes and encouraged the commission not to recommend council approve the subdivision.

"I have lived in Newark all my life and every year I see less and less undeveloped green space," Kelly said.

Gayle Giannetti, a resident of Trout Stream Drive, said her home is 10 feet from the White Clay Creek and, like Kelly, expressed her concern about the potential domino effect of the construction.

"If these three homes are built, we do have a fear of flooding occurring on our property," she said.

Joe Charma, of Landmark Science and Engineering, argued on behalf of the developer that the lots will not impact the surrounding area.

"The reason it's listed on the flood hazard is because [the water] could come on the lot," he said. "If it came on the lot one foot, it would be on the flood hazard."

Other residents, like Kathy Dettwyler, an Orchard Avenue resident and anthropology professor at the University of Delaware, were in support of the project and said Pirestani is exercising his right to develop his own land.

"I think the lots will be very nice. The home styles will be very nice," she said. "I think it's a great development for the neighborhood."

The planning commission voted 5 to 0 to recommend council approve the proposed project.

of Transportation] that we'll see projects pushed back or removed, so that's what's happening," she said.

One of those projects was the promised improvements to the Newark Regional Transportation Center, located just north of the University of Delaware's STAR Campus off South College Avenue.

Plans for the new transit hub, approximately 1,200 feet west of the existing SEPTA depot, were released in June 2013 and showed a station in which passengers would take an elevator to a 26-foot-high platform and walk across a covered pedestrian bridge to the other elevator in order to get to the new platforms.

Construction was supposed to begin this fall, but Dunigan said the $25 million for the station and platforms was lost in the state's reshuffling of funds.

"We certainly hope that the funding comes back," she said. "It's a project that's gotten a lot of community support. It's one of the projects that's ready to go as far as construction."

Dunigan said the engineering for the project is nearing completion and there is still about $5.5 million left in the budget to make improvements to the parking lot and access road, including painting new bike lanes and crosswalks.

Mayor Polly Sierer said the cuts to the budget are not only "unfortunate" for the city and the rest of the county, but also for the potential commuters in the area who were looking forward to utilizing the new station.

"I'm optimistic that it will happen, just maybe not in the next 12 months, but at least they're making progress and laying the groundwork," Sierer said. "It's better to have something happen than nothing happen."

"When the funding is available in the next fiscal year, then they'll be ready to go, which is a positive," she added.

Sierer said she anticipates the money will return to the project as more businesses build on the STAR Campus and more employees choose public transportation and biking over driving to work.

"The community is waiting, and I think the state sees there is a need," she said.

In addition to the train station, work on the stretch of Christina Parkway from Elkton Road to South College Avenue also lost construction money with the draft amendments. The new plan shows only $19,700 in FY 2014 and $212,700 in FY 2016 for preliminary engineering, depicting a decrease of $2.2 million from FY 2015 to 2018 and $18 million from FY 2019 to 2020.

Still, Dunigan said funding for several other Newark projects is unchanged and are nearing completion.

Workers are finishing up the final touches to the Pomeroy Trail as well as improvements to Elkton Road from Casho Mill Road to Delaware Avenue. Funding is intact for work on the area of Elkton Road from Casho Mill Road to the Maryland state line and $20 million is expected to be spent on construction in FY 2019 to 2020.

"We've still got some things going, so that's good," Dunigan said.

Glasgow, Christiana athletes honored for sportsmanship

POST STAFF REPORT

Glasgow High School and Christiana High School were both recently awarded the 2013-2014 DIAA State Sportsmanship Award, which was also awarded to 15 other schools in the state.

The DIAA's annual state-wide competition in sportsmanship evaluates athletic programs using a set of 10 standards. Schools submit an extensive application accompanied by evidence that is judged by a committee that then determines if the school has successfully met the standards.

According to district officials, this year marks the first time both Glasgow and Christiana have won the award.

"We believe that athletics are an extension of the classroom and they provide special learning opportunities beyond the normal school day," Glasgow Athletic Director Jeremy Jeanne said in a statement. "Strong athletic programs provide the laboratory where values are learned, appreciated and exhibited. Citizenship, leadership, integrity and ethics are critical elements in sports. These traits have been embraced and exhibited by the Glasgow community of administrators, teachers, coaches and student athletes in support of the program."

Opening of Christiana High School

Christiana Senior High School opened in Sept. 1963 on Salem Church Road. Construction cost $3.2 million, with another $450,000 spent on books and supplies.

The school had 68 faculty and staff members. Gilmore B. Ott served as principal.

As was common at the time, science was a strong emphasis. The new school included a planetarium and "what appears to be the most modern possible arrangement of labs for scientific study," according to a 1963 article in the Newark Weekly newspaper, which later merged with the Newark Post.

Students living south of the Pennsylvania Railroad were moved to the new high school. Neighborhoods affected included Arbour Park, Rolling Green, Catalina Gardens, Silverbrook, Robscott Manor, Brookside, Todd Estates, Chestnut Hill Estates, Hillside Heights, Birchwood, Tanglewood, Pilgrim Gardens and the communities of Glasgow, Ogletown, Christiana and Bear.

The editors of the Newark Weekly lavished praise on the new school, writing: "The words beautiful, functional, practical, and magnificent are the best for describing this new addition to the Newark school system. From all appearances, the building is designed for long-term, low-maintenance use with quality being the keynote."

'A pressure of numbers'

As the popularity of the suburbs grew in the 1950s and 1960s, the population of the Newark area swelled, and so did the demands on the school system.

"There was a pressure of numbers," explained Bill McLain, who was a math teacher at Newark during that time and later served several years at president of the Newark Historical Society. "The community was growing so fast."

At its peak, the Newark Special School District, as it was called at the time, was opening three new schools per year, McLain said.

Newark High School opened in 1893 at 83 E. Main St. (now the University of Delaware bookstore), and by the 1950s, it was outgrowing its then-home in the Academy Street building now owned by UD and called Pearson Hall. In 1955, the school moved to its current location on Delaware Avenue.

However, just a few years later, the school was growing crowded once again, and district officials decided to build a new school on Salem Church Road near the town of Christiana, which had recently been absorbed into the district.

Due to the immediate need to relieve overcrowding, administrators decided to switch over half of each class, rather than begin with 10th grade and add a grade each year. (At the time, high schools consisted only of 10th, 11th and 12th grades.)

"It went better than expected," McLain recalled. "The only difficult part was for the seniors who'd been at Newark all those years."

One Newark student found herself in a unique situation when the switch was made.

Susan Cooke's father, William, served as president of the school board and thus was one of the key players in the decision to move the students. However, as a resident of Brookside, Cooke was one of the students who had to switch schools.

"I was not happy," she recalled. "My boyfriend went to Newark. I had to go to Christiana. In a high schooler's mind, that's not a good thing."

She said she later came to realize that her father was in a tough spot, with no precedent for making such a switch.

"Dad was just making a good business decision," she said. "He was a principled man. He felt it was the right thing to do."

But that doesn't mean she didn't jokingly blame him for ruining her senior year.

"Dad and I laughed about it until the day he died," she said.

As for the boy she left behind at Newark? She quickly got over him once she arrived at Christiana and met Mike Golden, who was the senior class president.

"Now he's my husband of 45 years," she said, smiling, as the couple enjoyed drinks and hors d'oeuvres last Friday night at a reception for the '64 alumni.

Teammates become rivals

One of the toughest parts of the split, several alumni said, was the divvying up of the sports teams. At the time, Newark was well-known for wrestling, cross-country and, most of all, football.

"We would have been state champs if we had all stuck together," said Golden, who played on the Newark and, later, Christiana gridiron teams.

But instead, they were split up, with Newark retaining most of the varsity players, he said.

Newark had a strong agriculture program, and members of Future Farmers of America were allowed to stay at NHS regardless of where they lived. Coincidentally, several of the athletes developed a sudden interest in farming, Golden noted.

Members of both teams quickly began to anticipate their head-to-head match up.

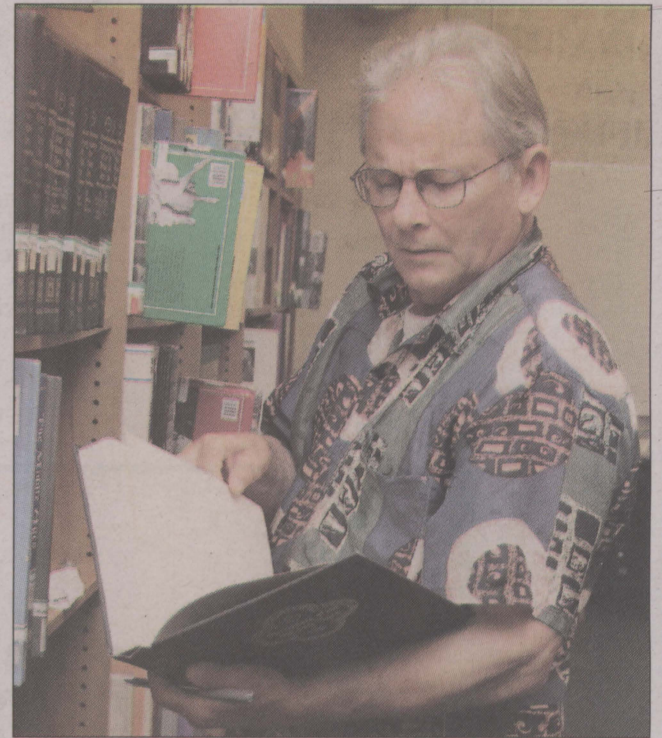

"We stopped playing Elkton, and our rival became Christiana," Walker said.

The Yellowjackets and Vikings met for the first time on Thanksgiving Day 1963, just six days after the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Newark handily won the game, played at Delaware Stadium.

"When it came to sports, forget it," Christiana graduate Judy Kelley Dale recalled, laughing. "We were losers."

A chance to build traditions

Once the initial shock wore off, most Christiana seniors embraced the chance to build traditions at the new school, Dale said.

Newark graduate Edward Moore looks through books at the Newark High library during a tour of the school on Saturday.

"We got to decide the logo, colors, etc.," she said. "It was great to be able to do this."

As a class officer, Golden was a part of creating many of those traditions. He credited the school administration with giving the students room to make their mark on the new school.

"Folks wanted to make it special because they knew we were leaving a lot of friends behind," he said. "It took a while, but by the end of the first year, the newspaper had come out and they had the yearbook committee. Once that got organized, the school spirit started."

Many of the students kept in touch with their former classmates back at Newark, and students at both schools gathered at community events, such as dances at the Aetna fire hall and the New Century Club and through the cotillion program at Newark Country Club.

"It was tough friendship-wise," Christiana graduate Ken Wiggins said, while looking out at the dozens of alumni catching up and reminiscing last Friday night. "But we're still friends."

New library exhibit features Newark teacher's scrapbook dating back to WWI

By ERIK HALBERG
Special to the Newark Post

The public can now access a digital collection of the Agnes P. Medill Boys' and Girls' Liberty Clubs of Delaware scrapbook, thanks to the efforts of staff members of the University of Delaware Library.

"The scrapbook, created in 1918, illustrates American homefront patriotism during World War I and also reflects the influence of UD's Cooperative Extension program, which is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year," university officials in a press release.

Agnes Medill, a teacher hailing from Newark, worked with members of the university and other Delawareans to set up and maintain 15 patriotic boys' and girls' clubs all over Delaware. Medill would regularly travel to each of the clubs to give presentations and further organize them in her old Model T Ford known as 'Lizzie.'

The scrapbook, which will be available on the university's digital archive UDSpace, features many pictures of the various clubs and their staffs and members. It can be accessed at <http://www.lib.udel.edu/digital>.

Out of the Attic

Delaware College adds major building — 1892

This week's Out of the Attic item is an 1890s view of newly built Recitation Hall on the Delaware College campus in Newark. Dr. John A. Munroe, author of the "History of the University of Delaware," wrote about the history of the building:

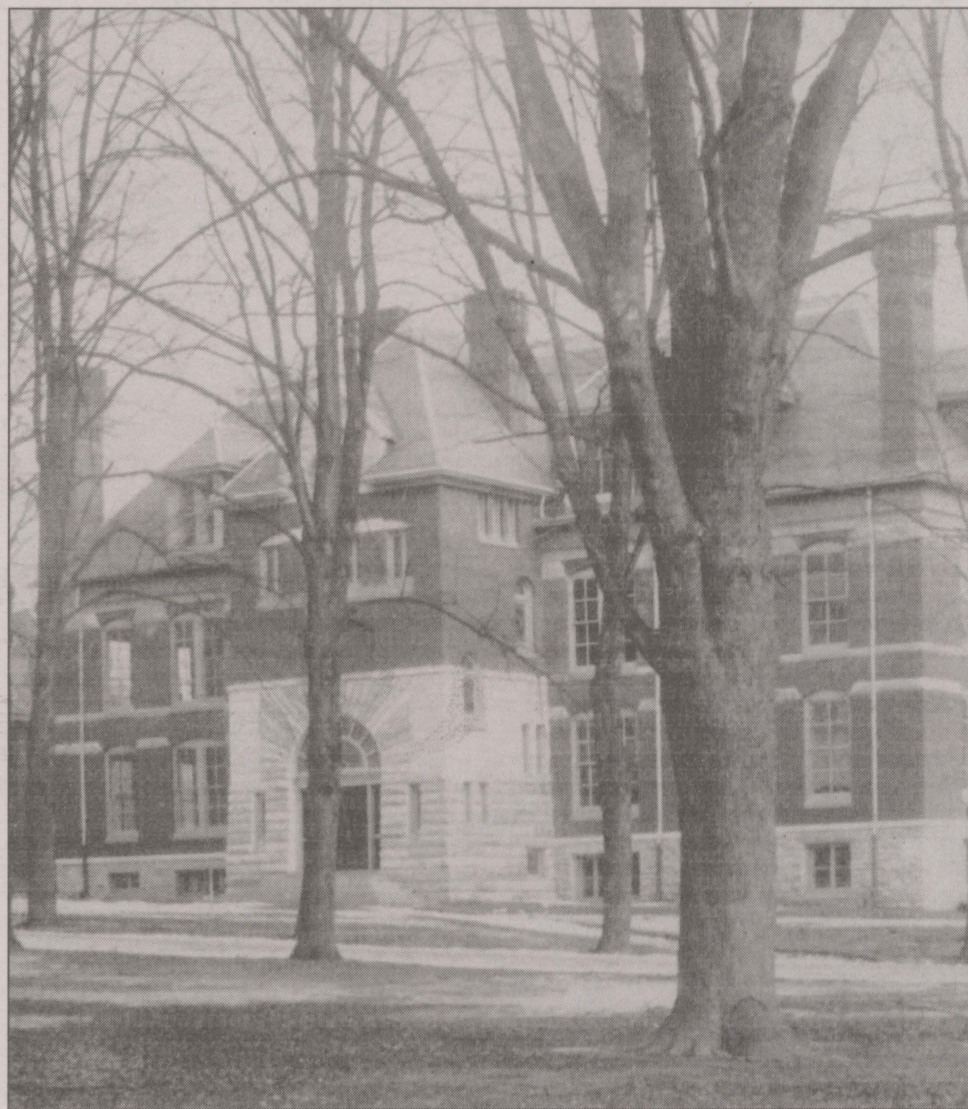

Built in 1891-92 to the east of Old College, Recitation Hall was three stories high with an electrical laboratory in the basement and a large auditorium on the third floor. The building had offices and classrooms and in a few years, the college library was moved here, first in 1896 to a room on the second floor, and then to a larger space on the third floor. Commencement exercises and student dances were also held on the third floor. The new building soon rivaled Old College as a center of activities.

With a direct appropriation from state tax funds of $25,000 and a later $6,000 supplement, the school trustees turned to the Furness, Evans Company of Philadelphia, headed by Frank Furness, the leading architect of the day, for plans for the new classroom building. The builder was Joseph T. Willis. In addition to Recitation Hall, Willis built a woodworking shop and a machine shop to go with the already existing greenhouse east and northeast of Old College and made extensive alterations to the chemical laboratory in Old College.

In 1821, the Delaware General Assembly had passed an act authorizing establishing a college at Newark. In 1833, land was purchased for New Ark College and the first building, "Old College," was built. The school opened in 1834. Later it was re-chartered as Delaware College. It closed in 1859. In 1870 Delaware College reopened as a "land grant" college with programs in engineering and agriculture promoting "practical education" in addition to the traditional liberal arts program.

Learn more at the Newark History Museum located on South College Avenue beside the bridge. It is open Sundays from 2 to 5 now through November. Make appointments to visit at other times by calling 302-368-9845 to schedule. For more information go to the website www.NewarkDeHistoricalSociety.org, or contact their message phone at 302-224-2408, e-mail at newarkdehistoricalsociety@yahoo.com, or postal mail to P. O. Getting your gamers to get outdoors

By MATTHEW JOHNSTON

4-H Junior Leader

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, more than one-third of youth ages 2 to 19 are overweight, and approximately 17 percent are obese.

This is a problem because it can cause a greater risk of several health problems, such as heart disease, Type 2 diabetes, breathing problems, osteoarthritis and much more. Not only that, but unhealthy people have trouble exercising, much less making it a habit. This means that once you are in an unfit state, it's hard to get in shape.

There are two key factors in maintaining a healthy weight: eating right and exercising regularly. Unfortunately, only 42 percent of youth ages 6 to 11 get the recommended amount of exercise. I mean, video games aren't always bad. Some are even made specifically to build hand-eye coordination and reflexes. But sometimes it's good to just put down the controller and go outside.

Kids often have short attention spans and yet they can play video games for hours on end. What is it about video games that keep them entertained for so long, and how could we use these aspects to make exercise more fun?

First, video games have a certain mystery quality that has kids wondering, "What's behind this door?" or "What's going to happen next?" Parents, one thing you can do is take your kids on a hike somewhere you've never been before. As you are walking, ask questions that create a mystery, such as, "What do you think is across that bridge?" or "I wonder where that big river leads." Even if you have been somewhere before, there's always something new to see. You might spot a raccoon, a deer, or even an eagle.

Second, video games have a challenge-reward aspect. For example, if you beat level 10, you unlock a new character. Parents, you can challenge your children to achieve a goal that would allow them to earn a reward. Perhaps you could challenge little Jimmy to run a mile in a certain amount of time, and if he does, let him stay over at a friend's house.

Video games also encourage friendly competition. Gamers often get together to play against each other. Registering for team sports, such as baseball or football can help to use that competitive side to get some good exercise.

Lastly, kids play video games to hang out with friends. And really, any activity can be done with friends. Just last weekend, I went to the Delaware Rock Gym to go rock climbing with a bunch of friends.

That was two full hours of exercise, and we had a lot of fun.

In conclusion, many kids are overweight because they don't exercise, and they don't exercise because they don't think it's fun. If we incorporate the aspects that make video games so much fun into exercise, we may be able to get more gamers off the couch and onto the playground.

Matthew Johnson is the 4-H junior leader for the University of Delaware Cooperative Extension. He and his colleagues write a periodic column for the Newark Post.

- Sec. 32-11(a)(1)j - parking and loading spaces. All uncovered parking and loading spaces shall be located at least ten feet from all abutting perimeter streets and property lines. This plan shows the proposed parking spots to be less than 1 foot from the eastern property line and 3 feet from the southern property line, requiring a 10 foot variance and a 7 foot variance, respectively.
- Sec. 32-56.2(d)(1) - building setback lines. Minimum setback required in RM, under Sec. 32-11(c)(5) is 30 feet from the line of all perimeter streets. In any district, when the average setback of existing buildings is within 200 feet of the side lot lines and within the same block front and zoning district, and is less than such required distance, such building need not be set back from the front street line any further than such average setback. The average setback of buildings within 200 feet on Continental Avenue is 16 feet. This plan shows 8 feet, requiring an 8 foot variance.

Newark National teams still alive in playoffs

POST STAFF REPORT

After a week of regional play, two Newark National Little League teams are still alive in the all-star tournaments. Both teams are Delaware state champions.

In the majors, Newark National will play today in the semifinals after winning two of four games this week at the Mid-Atlantic regionals in Bristol, Conn.

The team started off with a 13-7 victory against Maryland and then lost its next game against Pennsylvania, 8-4. That was followed up by a 9-4 win over Washington, D.C., on Monday before Newark was beat 11 to 10 by New Jersey on Wednesday.

As of press time, a time for Friday's semifinal game had not been set. However, it will be televised by ESPN.

If Newark National wins, it will go on to play in the Mid-Atlantic championship on Sunday for a chance to return to the Little League World Series for the second-straight year.

Meanwhile, Newark National's junior-level team beat Maryland on Wednesday to clinch a spot in the Junior World Series, held in Taylor, Mich.

Below are photos from the majors team's first game in Bristol last Friday.

City to begin water main flushing Monday

POST STAFF REPORT

The city's annual water main flushing is scheduled to begin Monday and run through Aug. 15.

Unlike previous years, the city has not set up designated days for each neighborhood. Instead, flushing could happen anytime next week. Officials say the move will "allow us to achieve better flushing results in each neighborhood."

The city offers the following tips for residents:

1. As flushing of water mains is conducted, you may experience fluctuations in water pressure and changes in water clarity. These changes are temporary.

2. If you experience discoloration, please wait approximately 30 minutes for our flushing crew to move out of the area, then run cold water in a bathtub or basin sink until clear.

3. Residents are advised to postpone laundering, dish washing and showering between the hours of 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. each day during this week to avoid discolored water and possible water pressure fluctuations.

4. If your laundry becomes stained, keep the clothes wet and rewash with "Rust Rover" powder. Rust Rover packets are available from the Public Works and Water Resources Department located on the second floor of the Municipal Building.

5. Please contact the Public Works and Water Resources Department at (302) 366-7055 with any questions or concerns.
