Dearest, — I have just stepped in here to make a call, and while the rest of the "push" are talking I must scrawl you a line. I have had every minute occupied, and wrote you the other day, but you have not left my thoughts. It is generally understood that we are engaged here, and I am besieged, overwhelmed with congratulations and love from my girl friends. I don't say anything but laugh and show my ring. It is very much talked about here. I danced Tuesday night until one, getting home at 2:30, danced last night until twelve P.M.

You don't know how much I wish you were here. Your absence from Boston, I fear, helped to destroy some of my pleasure. Why didn't you come? Next time take my word and come, won't you?

Just a line now before I get out. I love you, love you, love you. Try and get to N.Y. soon, I want to see you so much on a very important matter,

With all of my heart,

Your own devoted &
Little Wife
