Sometimes there is nothing better than the quiet solitude of a lazy afternoon . . . It is unusual to find the steps outside of Purnell Hall void of the mass of students who congregate there on bright, sunny days. Some stop to talk with friends, others catch up on work in between classes and the lucky ones are able to find a place to snooze in the sun.

When you are overloaded with work, sometimes all you can do is smile. A smile can brighten any day.

As the weekend draws to a close and a quiet Sunday morning dawns, the fast paced partying nights seem like mere memories. Although Sunday is a much needed day of recovery for most students, some of the more dedicated attempt to do work in the library. Sometimes, however, the weekend takes its toll. Despite good intentions, the thoughts of sleep preclude any possibilities of studying.

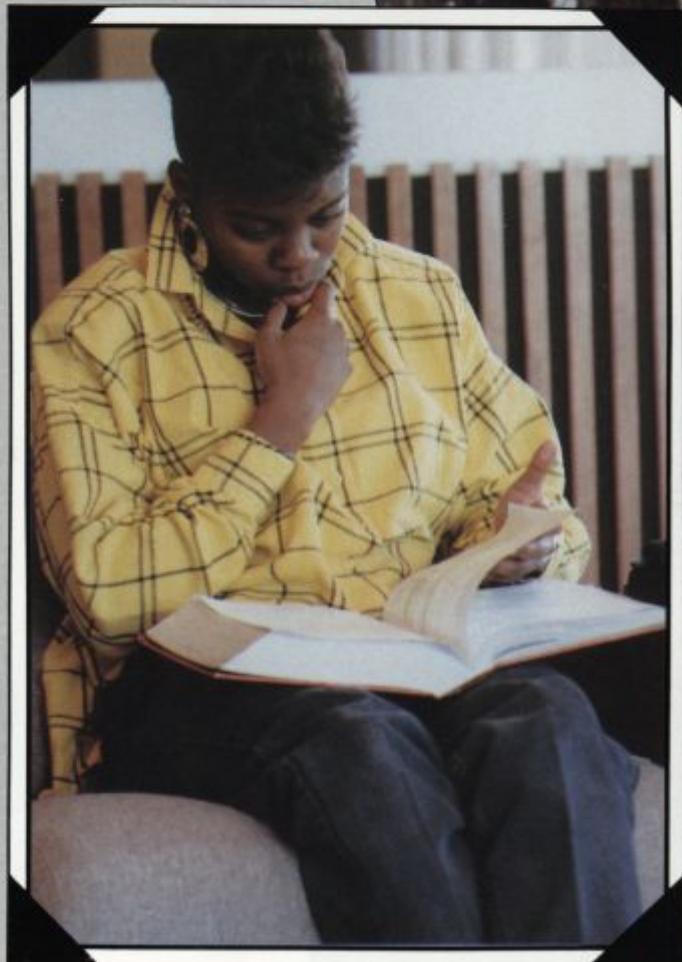

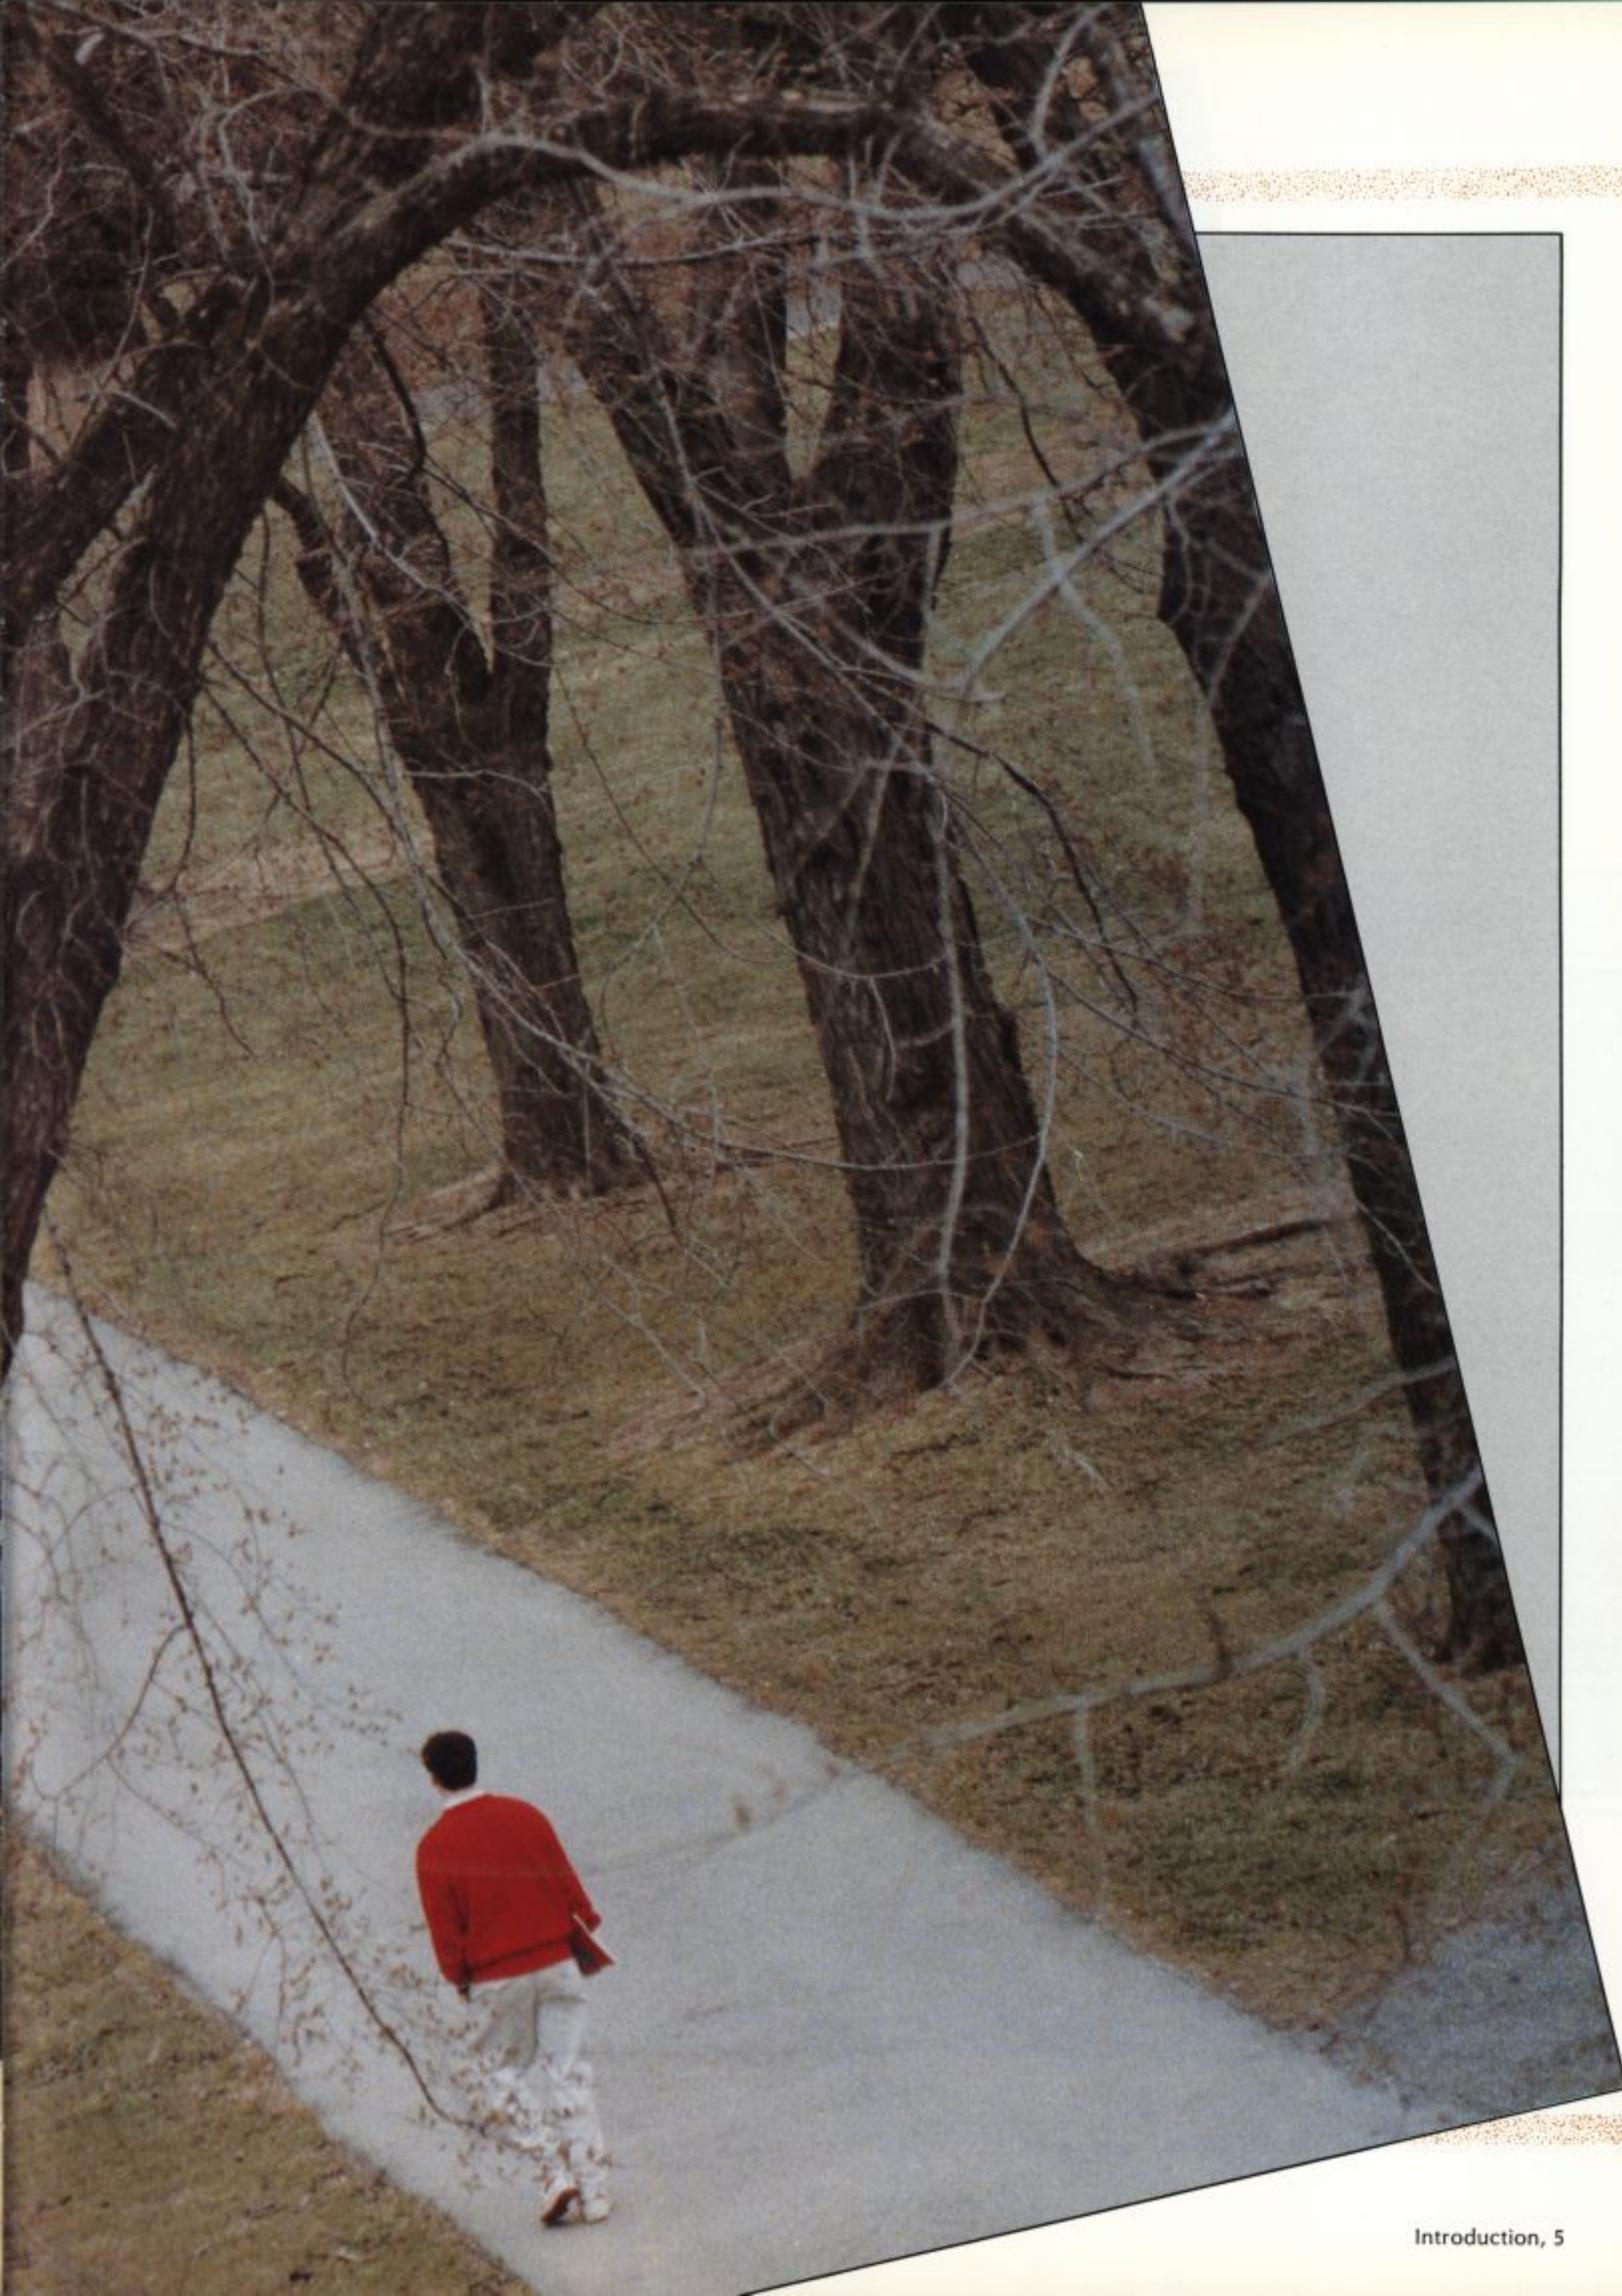

The Library: a perfect place for a dreary Monday night. Four floors of computers, media, magazines, and endless rows of books. When you need to get away, it is easy to lose yourself with a book you never imagined existed.

In the early morning, the Mall acquires an atmosphere of peaceful abandon. The paths lay empty under a canopy of branches from the towering trees that line their sides. Slowly, the campus will come to life as a few early risers make their way across campus. In just a few hours, the Mall will be teeming with life.

Studying: definitely a basic means of survival in college. It is something no one likes to think about, but something we all have to do. Sometimes, the texts seem to go on forever, but perseverance, in the end, always seems to pay off.

The steps of Memorial Hall provide the perfect spot to sit back, read a book and bask in the sun.

It is a common occurrence. All over campus friends stop to chat. In a quick passing, they exchange a friendly greeting. If time is not pressing, they run down the latest gossip. Everywhere, friends can be seen laughing, chatting and pausing to immortalize their friendship with a picture.

The new Delcat Computer System at the Morris Library made the difficult task of finding books a little easier. The system, a computerized card catalogue, placed a vast array of information about books right at the user's fingertips.

At the end of classes, the bus provides a much welcomed alternative to a long walk home. On weekdays, the busses are crowded with upperclass students commuting between North Campus, Off-Campus apartments and classes. Weekend nights find the busses overflowing with students singing and shouting as they make their way to various parties and finally home.

Wednesdays or "Hump Days" as they are commonly known, act as a catalyst to get people through the week and into the weekend. Hump Days signify that the end of a hard week of classes is approaching. In this way, they somehow make the close of the week pass more quickly.

In the spring, as the air gets warmer and the days get longer, the pace on campus seems to slow a little. Students take time out to sun on the steps of Memorial Hall or to take a ride through campus.

Since on-campus residents are forbidden to have pets, (besides fish) a friendly dog is a welcomed sight on campus. Since the campus is open, such occurrences are not uncommon. For those who study outside, these visitors provide a good excuse to take a break from the books.

Football games attract a vast array of spectators. Young, old, students, parents and visitors fill the stands, comprising a colorful assortment of fans.

Finally . . . the long week has ended and it is time for a night out on the town. On Saturday nights, students file into the Stone Balloon on Main Street, one of the more popular places near campus to go and let loose!

A peaceful afternoon along the Mall in North Central Campus is an irresistible alternative to studying indoors. The warm sun is sure to cure even the worst case of writer's block.

Away from the stadium, a group of friends start up their own game of football. These informal games, played without the roar of the crowd and the music of the band, are popular with those who want to get out of the dorm on a sunny afternoon.

All around the stadium, inside and outside, the sound can be heard. The triumphant, elated sound of the Marching Band echoing through the stadium on a Saturday afternoon. The trombones and drums following the flight of the football from the kick-off to the final play. Throughout the game, the entire band plays fight songs, both encouraging the team and riling the crowd.
