NEWARK, DELAWARE, WEDNESDAY, JULY 3, 1912

NUMBER 23

CARNIVAL WEEK IN NEWARK

Enthusiasm and Success Mark Opening Night--- Greater Attractions to Come

The automobile parade with which the second Firemen's Carnival opened on Tuesday evening far surpassed that of last year. About thirty cars were in line, many of them beautifully decorated. Fire Chief Wilson in the automobile which is to be chanced off on Saturday evening, was followed by Minnehaha Band in O. W. Widdoes' large auto truck.

The judges, Mrs. R. W. Shapleigh, St. Louis; Mrs. Middleton, Wilmington, and Mr. Osborne, Philadelphia, all of whom were visitors to the town, awarded the first prize to Daniel Thompson, the second to Frank Fader and the third to H. B. Wright. Other cars cleverly and tastefully trimmed were those of R. A. Whittingham, E. L. Richards, Dr. J. S. Gillfillan, Ernest Frazer and A. L. Beals.

Following the parade the carnival grounds became the center of attraction and crowds of people made the opening night a successful one.

The regret which was at first heard over the failure to secure the college grounds has been changed to congratulation on the present beautiful location and arrangement of the booths and gardens. The fine old shade trees afford great cool spaces for the afternoon and add largely to the beauty of the general effect.

The booths are tastefully decorated, each one following some color scheme or special idea suggested by the dainty articles for sale. All the booths and refreshment gardens under the direction of the ladies are situated on the campus back of the High School, while those amusements in charge of the men are on the house lot on Delaware avenue. This arrangement scatters the crowd so that there is never an unpleasant jam on any part of the grounds.

Better provision has been made for the entertainment of the little folk this year than ever before. The ever popular balloon and all sorts of novel toys are in evidence everywhere.

The electrical effect, together with scores of gay Japanese lanterns make the whole scene a brilliant one.

The treasurer reports the receipts on the first night equal to that of the first night last year.

This evening is Red Men's night. Visiting lodges will meet at 7.30 to form for a grand parade on Main street. Wawa, Little Elk, Little Bear and Andastaka Tribes will join with Minnehaha Tribe in making the parade an interesting one.

On Thursday at 3 p. m. Hon. L. Irving Handy will deliver a Fourth of July address. Immediately following the speaking the baby show, under the direction of Mrs. A. L. Beals, will open in the vaudeville tent. About one hundred babies have been entered and this is expected to be one of the most interesting features of the week. In the evening a choice selection of fireworks will be shown. Newark has had no public display for several years and this feature is attracting much interest to that evening. Special features have been planned for each of the succeeding evenings.

Additional contributions have been received as follows:
National Bank, $10.00
Dr. Harter, 5.00
G. G. Kerr, 2.00

BOARD OF HEALTH INSPECTION REGULAR MEETING OF COUNCIL

Co-operate with Board of Health--- Tax Rate Fixed

The regular council meeting was held in council chamber on Monday evening. Mayor Hossinger presiding. Messrs. Barton, Fader, Sutton, and Morrison responded to roll call.

The treasurer's report was read, showing a balance on hand of $1,490.20.

Mr. L. D. Curtis, representing the Board of Health, was present, urged the necessity for a sanitary inspection of the town, and asked for an appropriation of $700.

Mr. Sutton moved that a draft be drawn for $100, the Board of Health to look after and employ help to keep any bad gutters in sanitary condition.

Dr. Watson entered a protest against the unsanitary gutter running in front of his property.

By motion of Mr. Sutton the tax rate for 1912 was made $1.00 on the $1,000 assessment.

Mr. J. A. Collins asked Council to place at the light plant, one of his Damper Regulators, on 30 days trial, if not satisfactory to be returned. Price $125.

By motion of Mr. Morrison the Carnival Committee will be requested not to place the shooting gallery in front of the look-up.

OPEN AIR SERVICES

Beginning with Sunday evening next, a series of open-air services will be held on Sunday evenings in July, on the college campus, fronting the Orotary at 6.30 sharp.

The pastors of the churches in Newark will join in conducting these services and ask the earnest co-operation of their respective congregations to make these services a success toward the general uplift of the town.

There will be a brief devotional service with the singing of familiar hymns and a practical address on some aspect of the gospel message. You are urged to come and bring a friend with you.

HONORS FOR DR. DAWSON

Friends of Dr. Charles Dawson will be glad to hear of recent honors bestowed upon him by the Baltimore Medical College Alumni Association. Each year this association awards a gold medal for the best research work. This time the award was made to Dr. Dawson in recognition of a Thesis on Anthrax, published by the Bureau of Animal Industry at Washington, and also issued as a bulletin from the experimental station here.

Dr. Dawson had previously gained strong recognition in scientific circles, but this work on the disease of anthrax stamped him as an authority in this line of work. His investigations have placed him as not only a local veterinarian of high standing, but a scientist of world-wide consideration. The work being done here has brought the station into no small recognition. Not only this, it has been of the most practical benefit to the farmers of our State.

Dr. Dawson recently resigned from the experimental station and returned to Florida, where he is connected with the State Board of Health. Before coming here, he was a professor in the University of Florida and veterinarian to the State Board.

The medal which has been presented is an honor of no mean proportions. On the face is the inscription "Baltimore Medical College Alumni Association," while on the reverse side appears "Awarded to Charles F. Dawson, M. D., D. V. S., June 4, 1912."

RESULT OF TEACHERS' EXAMINATIONS

The teachers of rural New Castle County who were examined some time ago received their marks from the State Board of Education on Monday.

The results of the examination were as follows:

Thirty took the tests for permanent elementary certificates. There was one complete failure and the applicant will not be given another examination for one year. One teacher failed in two subjects and five in one subject. These will be given another examination about August 1 in the branches in which they failed to make good.

The candidates for primary, kindergarten and limited elementary work numbered 72, of which number but 23 passed; five failed completely, and 44 in one or more studies. The complete failures will not be taken up until next year, but the others will be examined again about August 1.

A Social Afternoon

The music class of Miss Nell Wilson gave a recital last Thursday afternoon. About thirty-five pupils and friends were present.

The prize offered to the pupil who had the greatest number of well-prepared lessons to her credit at the end of the year, was won by Miss Geneva Burnite. Miss Elizabeth McNeal received honorable mention.

Want Electric Lights

The citizens of New London, Pa., and locality are indignant over the withdrawal of electric light service, soon after many had gone to the expense of wiring and preparing to reap the benefit of this service.

It is said the company which formerly furnished electric light to the citizens is willing to run a new service line from West Grove, but this is not looked upon with favor by many, as it seems too long a circuit from the power house to the consumer. The dismantling of the line from the plant to New London is a source of annoyance, as the people went to considerable trouble and expense to install wires, light fixtures and motors for power purposes. The village also has no street lights as formerly.

A proposition to purchase a gasoline engine and generate electricity for the village is suggested and the matter is being canvassed.

The farmers are in the midst of wheat harvest. The yield promises to exceed that of last year.

Get Rid of the Flies

Third of Series of Articles Printed at the Request of the Civic Committee New Century Club

It has been said that everything has its use. If this is so, our Creator must have had some purpose to fulfill when he created flies. It is undoubtedly true that flies have not been considered a great nuisance nor detrimental to health until within a few years past, when it was discovered that they were carriers of certain forms of disease. It might even be said that until we knew how dangerous these insects really are they were looked upon as useful in destroying a large amount of debris or refuse. This the flies consumed and hastened its return to its original elements.

Owing to the progress of our civilization, there is no longer as much refuse left exposed and uncleaned for as there was at one time. For various reasons we are now disposing of a large portion of the material which attracts flies, both for sanitary reasons and for personal comfort. In consequence, flies have lost their usefulness to a very great extent, in the same way that horns are no longer useful to cattle and in many ways are positively dangerous. In the same way flies are not only no longer useful, but on the contrary useless, unnecessary, something to be abhorred and to be "swatted" on sight.

It should be the chief concern of every home maker to have the conditions about the home so unattractive for flies that they will not enter either for the purpose of attacking organic material that may be exposed to their depredations, or to make uncomfortable the inhabitants of the home. There are several general principles which, if observed, will do much to keep flies out of the home, and thus reduce their danger to public health, as well as to prevent annoyance to the members of the household, especially infants and invalids. It is a well known fact that flies do not like darkness. Hence, if the dining room is darkened immediately after the meal, the room will not only be kept cooler during the heated months but it will also keep out many if not all of the flies. The same principle will apply in all the other rooms of the house, and a little thought and care on the part of the housekeeper in keeping the shades drawn in unused rooms will do very much to lessen the trouble caused by these pestiferous insects.

It is a well known fact that flies do not like certain odors which are not disagreeable, as a rule, to people, but even so, this unpleasantness is not so great as that caused by the swarming, buzzing and biting of flies. One old medical journal gives the following advice:

"Put a little oil of bay in a saucer and set it on a window sill. Or paint the window sills with varnish, paint or hard oil in which a little oil of bay has been mixed. No flies will stay in the room."

"A drachm or 10 cents' worth of oil of bay in one-half cup of hard oil is about the right proportion. It has also been recommended that if the room and furniture are dusted every day with a cloth which has been wrung from kerosene, it will tend to keep the insects out. The faint odor of kerosene soon passes off, and is preferable to flies."

It is a hard thing to say, nevertheless it is true, that the number of flies about a home is an indication of the efficiency of the housekeeper. If the home is kept as it should be, there will be nothing exposed for the flies to eat, and the environments will be made so unpleasant that they will move on.

The old saying, "There are no flies on me," has in it more than a grain of truth.

OBITUARY

MARTHA J. DOUGHERTY

Martha J. Dougherty, aged 67 years, died at her home on Depot Road, on Sunday, June 30th.

Funeral services were held from her late residence this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Interment in M. E. cemetery.

State Board of Pharmacy Meets

The State Board of Pharmacists have been in session to-day, in the State Board of Health Laboratory, Delaware College. Fourteen applicants for registered pharmacists were examined, among the number being James A. Bradley, the popular assistant in Rhodes' Drug Store.

The practical examination was held this morning and the written, from 1.30 to 6.00 this evening.

New Professor of Electrical Engineering.

The Board of Trustees of Delaware College met in Recitation Hall this morning and elected Thomas M. Roberts, professor of Electrical Engineering to fill the position of T. L. Sturgis, resigned.

Mr. Roberts is a New England man who since completing his studies has been in the employ of the General Electric Co., of Schenectady, N. Y. He is a graduate of the University of Oregon, and taught in that institution following his graduation. Later he studied at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology from which he took his degree. His duties will begin the middle of August.

Work Begins on Frazer Field

Work on the Frazer Field was started in earnest this week. Engineer Wilson with his assistants have the grading staked and the digging will be started at once.

Mr. Frazer has decided to give the work his personal supervision. Instead of accepting any of the bids submitted, he will have Stewart Company, contractor from Wilmington, to furnish teams and all equipment. There will be a decided effort made to complete the field before the college opening. This will be a big task. The public, in fact, has but little idea of the work to be done. Indeed few realize what a magnificent field it is to be built. The detailed plans when given out will be a pleasant surprise to all interested in Delaware.

LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP--BUT LEAP.

AN ESSAY ON DOING SOMETHING

Look before you leap, is a bit of English wisdom gotten off by some old Polonius, a member of the Town Council who opposed the sewer. The occasion was very likely a grocery box conference, where political destinies are settled and discussed and bloodless, though bitter wars are fought. We may differ as to the exact type of man he was, but certain it is that he was not an insurgent and no one would accuse an ancestor of Bryan's giving expression to such conservatism. He was a conservative, to say the least, though not perhaps as extreme as some twentieth century examples. This honor, however, is due to him; he caught the public ear in 1500 or thereabout, and the phrase is still a dominant force in Delaware.

But today, with the telling epigrams, expressive of power and telling force, we have gone him one better. The motto as revised is, "Look before you leap--but leap. This is much better. It takes away none of the wisdom of the old catch phrase, but urges and demands action, where the old adage only presupposed it.

Look before you leap--but leap. Don't take up the time in looking. Judge your distance, make the best jump you can and take the consequences. Give the next man a chance.

Too much looking creates too much regret for that other catch phrase, "Let well enough alone." And may God help the state, town or man who gets in that rut. "Let well enough alone." Never. There is no such sentiment. Nothing is really "well enough," not to try to further improve.

Now let's get real hard. Delaware, education, the college, Newark, streets, public improvements, sewer, public library. We have been looking before we leap. Let's make one decision to make things better. Conservatism, I mean, wealthy--leisureclass, take-it-easy

Report to Board of Health

The Board of Health will be glad to receive complaint of any unclean or dangerous spots on any street or premises in or near the town. Such complaint should be in writing and signed, and will be, of course, in all cases, held confidential.

You can help us by making such complaint, if it is serious and well considered.

Secretary, Board of Health.

Merry Time For Little Folk

Miss Mabel Smith entertained a number of her friends last Thursday on the lawn at her home. The little guests had a merry time playing games. Refreshments were served. Among those present were: Gertrude Hill, Helen Leak, Alice Leak, Evelyn Worrall, Elsie Ewing, Gladys McCallister, Elizabeth Worrall, Delena Leak, Ida Leak, Emma Lovett, Margaret Gessaman, Marjory Rose, Mabel Smith, Irma Cornog, Viola Edwards, Olive Porter, Alfred Ewing, Kennard Moore, Bayard Widdows, Emerson Smith.

Brandywine Springs Park

The management of Brandywine Springs Park is busy with a plan to make that resort even more popular for children. Among other attractions, valuable prizes will be distributed at the end of the season.

It is proposed to have a children's day once a week during July and August and the early part of September. Thursday will probably be selected. On whatever day is chosen the children will be given many free privileges among the park amusements, and it is expected that the concessioners will join the management in the distribution to the young patrons of balloons or the voting contests for the prizes, which will be decided on the big children's day at the end of the season. The park management will distribute voting tickets on payment of five on the cars, when going to the park. The method of voting will be announced as soon as the plan is worked out.

conservatism says, "let well enough alone," and "look before you leap." We are spending more for education than ever before; the college is stronger now than in its history; we have only a few cases of typhoid fever, and the sewer is a tax burden, and this town needs no public library. These are the expenses and the plain unvarnished truth is that conservatism, if laziness, may be so dignified, doesn't know the needs and demands of the hour. Some are honest in this belief, others lazy, and still others reluctant to bridge the difference between themselves and those fortunate in this world's goods and opportunities, created by an over-indulgent father.

There is another class of folks who are progressive at heart but hesitate to take the odium thrust upon them by the Grecian bend type of conservative.

Unless you have made a study of the species, it is difficult to pick the true type. One true test is this: Find a man who had his money left him, owns an automobile, wears silk stockings and never goes over 40 miles from home and can't walk a square without his car, never earned a dollar in his life nor gave work where another man could--that's a conservative with a shell on. He is likely a likable fellow, but his view is obstructed. Of course, there are different degrees of conservatism and were it not for the wisdom of its advocates, this town would be overrun, burned, looted and laid in ashes by the insurgent mob.

That's where the progressive comes in. He doesn't run and jump off like the insurgent; he doesn't spend a life time in looking for a place to jump, but he looks before he leaps, but he leaps.

What a brand old town this is! But think what it could be, if we would look before we leap and then leap and decide not to just "let well enough alone."

JANE ADAMS OF HULL HOUSE

Essay Read at High School Commencement by Eleanor Bayne Pilling

"To help and to save for the sheer love of helping and saving is the noblest thing any of us can do." Such has been the work of Jane Addams of Hull House, settlement worker and writer on social reforms.

Her first impulse and determination to live among poor people may be traced to childish experiences, where character, though formless, is nevertheless settling into definite lines of future development.

Such an experience came to her at the tender age of six while she was driving with her father through the poorer quarter of a neighboring town. She declared then with firmness that when she grew up she would have a large house, built not among the other large houses of the city but right in the midst of horrid little homes like those she had just seen.

It was, then, in these early impressions of her childhood that we may look for the simple foundation of that large faith any sympathy in humanity which is certainly essential for continuous living among the poor. Other reasons contributing to the same end may be stated in the three following propositions of more or less universal application. First, that there exists a genuine preference for residence in an industrial quarter to any other part of the city, because it is interesting and makes the human appeal. Second, that out of the bitterness of centuries of social and political injustice there has grown up a determination to equalize the opportunities of education for all. Third, that consequent upon the truth of the two propositions just stated, there exists a firm conviction, in the words of Cannon Barnett, that the things that make men alike are finer and better than the things that keep them apart.

What influenced Jane Addams to live in a settlement was the impression she received of East London and also the overcrowded quarters of a great city at night. She was with a small party of tourists who were taken to the East End by a city missionary to witness the Saturday night sale of decaying vegetables and fruit which, owing to the Sunday laws of London, could not be sold until Monday, and which as they were beyond safe keeping, were disposed of at auction at as little as possible on Saturday night. The people were huddled into ill-fitting, cast-off clothing. Their pale faces dominated by that most unlovely of human expressions, the cunning and shrewdness of the bargain-hunter who starves if he cannot make a successful trade, and yet the final impression was not of ragged tawdry clothing nor of pinched and sallow faces, but of myriads of hands empty, pathetic, nerveless and work-worn, showing white in the uncertain light of the street, and clutching forward for food which was already unfit to eat. In time all huge London came to seem unreal to her save the poverty in the East End.

Gradually a very simple plan grew up in her mind to rent a house in a poor section of the city of Chicago. From the very first her plan received numerous attractions. She went about the city with the object of the preliminary study of the neighborhood, with mission-aries and counsel with one who was working with the same object in mind. She was, however, in mind that the Hull House would be a center, when a neighborhood should finally be selected because of her pleasant experiences with that city and where her hearted people in their own country.

At last a suitable house was found standing well back from the street, surrounded on three sides by a broad porch which was supported by wooden pillars of Corinthian design and proportion. The house was rented, but it proved possible to sublet the second floor and the large drawing room on the first floor. After some necessary repairs were made, Miss Addams, with two other companions, moved into it on September 18, 1889.

The house had been built by Charles J. Hull in 1856, for his homestead, and from the beginning but itself most hospitably to the plans, as did its owner, who, in the following spring, gave a free leasehold to the entire house. The charter obtained five years later when Hull House was incorporated, stated its purpose: "To provide a center for a higher civic and social life; to institute and maintain educational and philanthropic enterprises, and to investigate and improve the conditions in the industrial districts of Chicago."

For the first five years it was hard to become accustomed to the unending activity and confusion of a house constantly filling and refilling with groups of people. The little children who went to the kindergarten in the morning were followed by the afternoon clubs of the older children, and those in turn made way for the educational and social organizations of adults occupying every room in the house on every evening.

When it had first been decided to take Hull House, it was said that it would be out of the stream of normal activity. On the contrary, long before the end of the first year, it became attached to various public bodies, for it was impossible to secure the smallest of the much-needed improvements without an appeal to public conscience and to organized bodies of government.

The first building erected for the house was designed for an art gallery, it contained a reading-room on the first floor and a studio above; the largest space on the second floor however, was carefully designed and lighted for art exhibits which had to do only with the cultivation of that which appealed to the powers of enjoyment rather than a wage earning capacity. The visitors who came to the Hull House art exhibits, displayed a genuine enjoyment and enthusiasm. This art gallery embodied a new attitude toward the immigrants. One Italian expressed great surprise when he found that the people at Hull House, although Americans, still liked pictures, and said that he did not know that Americans cared for anything but dollars—that looking at pictures was something people did in Italy, but not in Chicago.

The Hull House Woman's Club very early in its history found what was called, "A social extension committee," which at least once a month gave parties to the people in the neighborhood who for any reason seemed without much social pleasure.

The social value of the coffee-house and the gymnasium built the same year were quickly demonstrated. From the beginning the young people's clubs had asked for dancing, and nothing was more popular than the increased space for parties offered by the gymnasium with the chance to serve refreshments in the room below. The coffee-house gradually performed a mission of its own and became something of a social center to the neighborhood as well as a real convenience. Business men from the adjacent factories and school-teachers from the nearest public school, used it increasingly.

The end of the first five years found Hull House with a group of four buildings; the old house itself, which was occupied by the residents and used for the informal social gatherings; the Butler Building, which for three years contained a reading-room supported by the Chicago Public Library on the first floor and an art gallery and studio on the second; a large building attached to the back of the house which held the coffee-house and quarters for the men's club room and the gymnasium; the children's house, which sheltered the kindergarten and the day nursery; the main school on the first floor and a boy's club on the second floor; and a new building on Park street, housing the first new residents of the settlement and the one on Irving street containing the Jane Addams self-governing club of working girls which had been started in the third year of the history of Hull House, and which continues now in a handsome club house built expressly for its needs.

The old story of the head of an orphan asylum who prayed that the Lord might send him many orphans the next year so that he could add a new wing to his institution can never be applied to Hull House, although the number of buildings has increased steadily year by year.

One method of education at Hull House, is that made possible through dramatics, is largely amateur, although professionals have from time to time been most generous with their services. There are also Junior Dramatic Associations, through which it seems possible to give a training in manners and morals more directly than through any other medium and with which Shakespeare is astonishingly popular.

During the last fifteen years Hull House has grown in response to increasing needs. The men's club has moved into a building of its own. The club pays rent to Hull House for its use, and the lease contains not one restrictive clause, by which it is forfeited, if gambling or any alcoholic drinks are indulged in on the premises. The shops and Labor Museum continually demand more space. Smaller buildings furnish studios for several artists who teach classes at Hull House. The woman's club is housed in a building of its own. It has exclusive control of the library and sewing-room, but the large hall, which seats seven hundred and fifty people, is used every evening for other purposes, and even its seating capacity is not sufficient to care for the large audiences of men who came to attend the illustrated lectures given once a week throughout the winter.

The sanitary conditions of the neighborhood around Hull House are poor, the educational resources limited. The moral energy of the community, however, was aroused only when the people realized that they might become part of general movements which make for the reform and healing of such conditions that they have a right to claim fellowship with the powers which make for civic righteousness, and that their dire need may call out in them a proportionate energy. So far as Hull House has been able to contribute to this end it may be said to have performed the legitimate functions of a settlement.

Miss Addams has had many associates in her work, but it has been mainly through her instrumentality that Hull House has grown to such dimensions. Besides this work at Hull House she has written many books on social reforms, democracy, and the newer ideals of peace.

Although Jane Addams has accomplished and is accomplishing so many reforms, she is a modest simple little woman, a college graduate and a believer in reciprocal obligations, which we all have in this world but do not all realize. Her creed is, that we, who have better advantages than others, should help those who are not taught, to climb, that we should gather up the loose, rough fringes of society and weave the broken threads into a common warp and wool, and that the social fabric is no stronger than its weakest thread.

A Good Record

Figures just compiled show that in 1911 the various railroads of the Pennsylvania system west of Pittsburgh carried a total of 32,558,347 passengers and not one was killed as a result of a train wreck. Some idea of the density of this traffic, which was handled with this perfect record, may be had from the fact that the total number of passengers carried one mile in 1911 was 1,138,329,577.

The Vandalia railroad, a part of the Pennsylvania system, has carried 16,204,553 passengers in the last five years without a single one killed as a result of a train accident. Only 46 passengers have been injured in this period; this includes every case requiring surgical or medical attention however trivial. In the past five years the Vandalia has carried more than one-half a billion people one mile.

The Grand Rapids and Indiana railway has a record equally as good as the Vandalia, in that it has had no passengers killed in a train wreck out of 12,966,544 passengers carried in the five years ending December 31st, 1911. The density of traffic on this road was practically the same as on the Vandalia, 418,741,704 passengers having been carried one mile.

The Pennsylvania lines, by which are designated the "Fort Wayne Route," the "Pan Handle Route," and various other smaller roads, in 1911 carried a total of 26,593,543 passengers—hauling 931,823,628 passengers one mile—with not one killed as a result of a train wreck.

With the exception of 1910, when three passengers were killed in a train wreck, the Pennsylvania lines have a clean record for accidents for the past five years. In fact, the records show that of the 151,802,143 passengers carried on all of the lines of the Pennsylvania system west of Pittsburgh in the past five years the three mentioned above were the only ones killed as a result of a train accident.

Concerning Your Home

EVERY home should have a modern and thoroughly dependable plumbing system. Defective and unreliable plumbing fixtures in the bathroom, kitchen or any other part of the house, invariably interfere with the comfort and convenience of the whole family and often seriously affect health. It is therefore most important that your home should be as perfect in respect to the plumbing equipment as modern sanitary science can make it.

This is always the case when "Standard" Plumbing Fixtures are installed in a house. These fixtures are unexcelled for quality and sanitary efficiency, hence they are the fixtures we recommend and supply. The plumbing work on every job we do is proof of our high regard for QUALITY. May we estimate for you?

GET TOGETHER AND BOOST

The enthusiasm of local Democrats over the success of Wilson was of short duration, for scarcely had the news been received before the interest in the auto parade and opening of the Firemen's Carnival predominated. The weather had been specially arranged and shortly after six o'clock the crowds began to gather. Success was the motto of everybody. This is the firemen's week. And too, as we have said before, their success is to the interest of every citizen of Newark. The firemen have tried hard to have their equipment in keeping with the growth of the town. The determination shown in this carnival proves that this institution will, in the near future, be so organized and equipped.

Fortunate escape from serious fires has dulled the incentive for proper support. Our good fortune, (and it is only good fortune) in this respect causes us to forget the needs of these men, should a serious fire occur.

The people did nobly last year, but let every citizen do his very best again this year. Make the grand total of last year look like the proceeds of a strawberry festival. As yet, only a few contributions have been received. Do last year's generous act again. Invite your friends to the show—the best ever held in Newark—oh, the best ever held in New Castle county.

Qualify Hill, Wilkins' Terrace, Newark Heights, Evansville, Deandale, East End—get together. What you do for the firemen, you do for Newark. And that is the graceful way of helping yourself. Let's boom and boost Newark.

DISCUSSIONS ON

EDUCATION NEEDED

In another column Mr. Washburn has given his reply to Professor Conover on the subject of classical education. Our quotation from Spencer has, we hope, started another series of articles on this subject. Many of our readers have taken keen interest in the controversy. Last winter when the subject was being discussed, the Delaware State News commented and gave their views. It is hoped that Mr. Washburn will be called to task for his ruthless assaults on culture.

As we said last week, education is a leading problem in this State and during the next year promises to be of wide interest. Investigated by the new State Board of Education, revolutionary changes are to be recommended. With this in view, every phase that can be presented may be of permanent worth. These articles set us all to thinking. There are many citizens in our locality thoroughly capable of giving valuable suggestions on these questions, and by appearing in print they will add to the more successful solution of the educational problems of the State.

A recent criticism of the introduction of business training into rural high schools to the utter exclusion of elementary training in agriculture is pertinent. Comment was made of the condition at the recent High School commencement. Here the fascination of clerical work is presented to the country boy thereby training him directly away from the farm. The father is supporting an institution that tends to lead his boy away from the community. Directly resultant from this, the farm will gradually pass into a foreign peasant class, where by training the boy to the tenancies and success possible in up-to-date farming economic conditions are improved and the standard of citizenship raised.

All these are pertinent questions and worthy of the serious attention of every taxpayer. Let some thoughtful farmer express his opinion as well as the teachers and professors.

We have these issues to meet and decide. Let us have all the light we can.

Any subscribers not getting their paper on time would favor us by notifying this office. There have been several complaints during the past week. We are unable to explain this as we feel sure that the neglect is not here. By notifying us, you can assist us in finding out just where the trouble is and we will endeavor to have it rectified at once.

Men, Women and Religion

The men and religion forward movement is sweeping over America like a wave. In every one of our great cities, and in a score of our smaller ones, campaigns have been made so earnestly and successfully as to impress the most careless man or boy. Metropolitan newspapers have carried inspiring religious invitations in their very advertising columns. Boys' clubs and large organizations of business men have alike been workers in the movement or deeply reached by its message. Men all over the country seem suddenly to have awakened up to their religious responsibilities and opportunities.

But how about a woman and religion forward movement? whether included in the campaign or not, can any woman with patriotic or religious ideals stay out of its advance? The American woman has always, from the beginning of the nation, inspired and led forward religious work. When it seemed as if man had almost forgotten the church, she has been its mainstay.

Now her place is in the advance, too. Her duty toward her husband, her son, her brother, and her home, as well as toward her own soul, is not alone in following, but in leading such a national movement toward purity of life, justice to the weak, and consecration of heart and purpose to God.—Editorial in Harper's Bazar.

The Successful Guest

In an article on "The Girl as a Guest," in the July Woman's Home Companion, Anne Bryan McCall says in part:

"How is one to be the successful guest? A hundred ways suggest themselves, a hundred ways of paying for the privilege of staying in the homes of others; little household tasks that may be done; little household rules and interests to be respectfully followed; little thoughtful courtesies to be practiced; little pleasures of one sort or another to bestow on every one, but very especially on the aged and the young; a hundred little considerate, unselfish acts; a curbing of too violent opinions; a setting aside of too strong prejudices.

"All of these are practical means, and they will materially help the girl who is guest in the home of another, but back of all these lies something more fundamental. You may call it respect, or obligation, or reverence, or duty, or love; but whatever you name it, its function is to make this home that you live in, whether it be your own home or the home of another, a place of obligation, a place to which, for benefits received, you are under obligation to give in payment something of finer metal than gold or silver. The old phrase, 'I am much obliged,' is a good one. So, indeed we should all be 'much obliged' to give in return for what we receive.

"When all is said and done, when all the guests have come and gone, and the fire burns low on the hearth, I find myself still thinking of the minstrel of old as the ideal guest—the minstrel who, poor though he was, and hungry, brought with him the gift of song, and stories that stirred the heart; who, in return for the privilege of warming himself at a blazing hearth, warmed the hearts of his hearers, added glow to life, and kindled purpose in those whose motives may have burned low.

"Not gold or silver, but the real things of life; the sharing of ideals, the touch of life with life, the stirring of the heart; beauty and lofty things, given simply and humbly; and to be better than our common selves, lifted out of the commonplace by the opportunity; as the minstrel became for the time being and in the light of his host's fire, the instrument of song, a rest to those who were weary, an entertainer of those who had lost some of the zest of life, and an inspiration to the young.

"To be at one's best, there it is. That is the obligation, no doubt; to exact of oneself the best that one can be and the best that one can give."

Militia Notes

Definite arrangements are being made for the annual encampment of the militia, which will be held at the State Rifle Range below New Castle during the week of July 28th. A trolley will be run between Dobbinsville and the Rifle Range for the convenience of the militiamen and their visitors.

The detailed order was issued by General Wickersham on Monday, from which we clip the following items:

"The annual camp of instruction of the Organized Militia of Delaware will be held at the State Rifle Range, July 27 to August 3, 1912, and will be known and designated as Camp Cannon, in memory of Hon. William Cannon, ex-Governor of Delaware.

"This tour of duty, with the exception of the usual ceremonies, will be devoted to field exercises, small-arms practice and guard duty. The field officers, First Infantry, with Major William G. Ramsay, inspector of rifle practice, and First Lieutenant Elvid Hunt, E. S. A., on duty with the Organized Militia, will meet at the armory at Wilmington on Monday evening, July 8, at 8 o'clock, for the purpose of arranging a schedule of each day's exercises. The schedule so arranged will be submitted to the Adjutant-General on or before July 15, 1912.

"The commanding officer, First Infantry, will proceed to the camp with his regiment on the morning of July 27. The train schedule will be announced later. Officers of the field and staff, and non-commissioned staff will proceed with the company nearest their home stations.

"The chief quartermaster and commissary will furnish the necessary transportation, camp equipment, quartermaster supplies and subsistence for this camp.

"Major C. A. Short, inspector general, is designated as engineer officer, and will report to the chief quartermaster at the camp at 9 o'clock a. m. July 24.

"The regiment will be reviewed by the Governor on Thursday, August 1, at 2:30 p. m.

W. B. Walsh, of Sykesville, Maryland, is visiting Newark friends this week.

Mrs. J. B. Miller spent Sunday with relatives in Haddonfield, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. Blake and son, Kennard, of Mechanics Valley, spent Sunday with Mrs. M. E. Blake and family.

Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Blake were Baltimore visitors last week.

Messrs. N. M. Motherall, C. B. Evans, J. W. Cooch and W. A. Singles attended the Democratic convention in Baltimore, last Friday.

Mrs. T. R. Wolf is spending some time at Hotel Henlopen, Rehoboth, Delaware.

Miss Janet Sawyer, of Harrisburg, is the guest of Prof. and Mrs. Charles Lyndall Penny.

Mrs. G. T. Alderson and daughters, Alphonsa and Laura, are spending some time at Rehoboth.

Mr. J. M. Conner, Baltimore, spent the week end with G. Fader and family.

Mrs. Amos Osmond has returned from Harrisburg, Pa., where she visited her son, Charles Osmond and family.

THE CAR IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

THE CAR that is the superior of any stock gasoline car at any price in power, speed, easy riding qualities, simplicity and all-around ability. A car to be operated and maintained by its owner at the maximum of efficiency and minimum of up-keep cost; not a flimsy, assembled toy but the product of fifteen years experience and ample capital.

It has no fly wheel, clutch, shaft, chains, change-speed gears, universal joints, carburetor, magneto, batteries, cooling system, self-starting mechanism; in short, none of the complicated and cumbersome harness required to make up, to some degree, for the deficiencies of the gasoline engine.

It is subject to no disorders that cannot readily be located and remedied, usually without recourse to machinist or repair shop. The engine cannot be "killed" or stalled.

It is longer lived than a gas car, for it does not shake itself to pieces. There are only twenty six moving parts.

Its tires wear longer from its light weight and smooth, gliding motion. There is no jerk or jar when starting.

In material, workmanship, style and finish it is the peer of any automobile constructed, yet its cost is moderate.

IT IS THE STANLEY STEAMER.

Miss Julia Smith, of Bryn Mawr, is visiting H. F. Smith and family.

Mr. R. J. Colbert and family spent Sunday with relatives in Elkton.

Mr. and Mrs. George Kierski, of New York City, are visiting friends in town.

Miss Myrtle Scarborough, of Stanton, is the guest of Mrs. John Scarborough.

A SKETCH OF THE MILITARY DEPARTMENT OF DELAWARE COLLEGE

REVIEW BY THE COMMANDANT

To fit a young man to take his place as a citizen of the United States in this day and generation, what should be the most important topics in his curriculum? Surely the first should be patriotism. He should have a reverence for the flag and for everything it stands for. Secondly, he should have a respect for duly constituted authority. These two traits, more than any other, are lacking today in American character, and both are absolutely essential to the permanent life of a republic. Today our patriotism is purely emotional as compared, for instance, with that fine quality of patriotism possessed by the Japanese, and which the Germans also have in such high degree. As for respect for duly constituted authority there is none. Every one in office, from the President of the United States to the policeman on the beat, is the subject of caricature by the press and ridicule on the stage. All this adds to the gayety of the nation; but it is dangerous, and if long allowed to continue, is going to mean something lacking in individual character, the aggregate of which means national character. It would be well that the young citizens of a republic should be taught hygiene—how to live healthfully and to take care of the body properly. His muscular strength, agility, and quickness and accuracy of movement should all be developed. In other words, he should be trained to be as nearly physically perfect a man as possible.

These are some of the virtues inculcated by military training, and I might say, also, the cardinal principles for the training of boys and young men who are going to be the healthy, broad-minded men who shall keep this republic virile and strong to fulfill its destiny.

Another object of the military instruction given at this college is to qualify students to be company officers of infantry, volunteers or militia. To those who believe in unlimited arbitration, treaties and universal peace and disarmament, this last mentioned feature may not appeal, but those who have given the subject serious consideration have not the slightest confidence in arbitration as a security against war. A nation that has a good case is not going to lose that case by arbitration in a crisis. A person will not arbitrate about his honor, unless it be a person who has none and therefore cannot be perjured. There are questions about which no nation will ever arbitrate if that nation is fit to continue an independent existence. The same may be said of an individual. The fact that we have several thousand cadets trained and under training in various military schools throughout the country has already saved us from having the third war with Great Britain. During the controversy over the Venezuelan boundary question, three British officers were sent to America to "spy out the land" as one of them afterward expressed it, and to report upon our preparedness for war. They traveled the country over, and reported that the regular forces were in splendid shape, but were so few in number as to be practically negligible; that our National Guard was a very nice little social organization that could not muster any really trained soldiers, and not even a hundred thousand partly trained. But that they found "on every seventh hill top" a military school which had been for years turning out graduates capable of officering the numerous volunteers which we would have available. They therefore advised against war.

It has always been a question as to whether or not it would be a good thing to have a national university in this country. We have the other two kinds of universi—those supported by the States, and those established upon religious or charitable foundations. The latter are all private corporations—although exerting an ever-increasing influence in public affairs. It has generally been considered that these universities furnished ample educational opportunities and served the needs of the country. It is as generally conceded, however, that no matter how much professional education might be represented by the diploma of any one of them, not a single university gives exactly the training that is most needed by the young men of a republic. Most of them were molded by the traditions of the old world, more or less modified to suit the circumstances of their environment. In none of these institutions, except those which have a semi-military character, is there any attempt to teach patriotism, or respect for authority.

All students at Delaware College are required to take military instruction. Exemption is granted by the faculty only for physical disability, or conscientious scruples, but any student who may be excused from military duty, for either of these reasons, shall be required to select such other work as shall be deemed by the faculty equivalent to the military work omitted. The great benefit of the exercise thus taken, and the fact that it teaches habits of promptness and obedience, aside from the better fitting of young men for patriotic duty in time of need, gives the subject peculiar importance and value. The same result could not be obtained by omitting the military feature. Just as there can be no patience without pain, or resignation without suffering, there can be no such patriotism or respect for authority as must exist to keep a republic alive, without a martial spirit.

Three hours per week throughout the year is given to the course. Of this time, one hour per week, for each class, is devoted to theoretical instruction, including lectures by the commandant. The members of the cadet corps have organized a rifle club which is affiliated with the National Rifle Association of America. The college furnishes the ammunition and range for indoor practice. The State of Delaware has given the college permission to use its outdoor range for field practice. Medals are given as prizes for target practice. The encouragement of military virtues and instruction is also encouraged by the annual presentation of a premium to the student who shall attain the highest proficiency in the military department. Upon graduation, the names of such students belonging to the class as have shown special aptitude for military service are reported to the Adjutant General, U. S. Army, and also to the Adjutant General, State of Delaware, who publishes their names in an order.

Military instruction at civil-educational institution was inaugurated by Act of Congress in 1862—when its necessity was forced upon the attention of the loyal States by the history of that year. This was begun in a slipshod, haphazard, and inadequate way. In recent years, however, it has received much more serious attention, and is now established on a substantial basis. The United States Government supplies arms, ammunition and equipments, and details an officer. Regular inspections are also made by an officer of the Inspector General's Department, who renders lengthy reports to the War Department upon the efficiency of the cadet corps and the methods and scope of instruction. This with a view to still further increasing the usefulness of the military department.

Much has been said and written about the effect of wars upon the upbuilding of the character of a people. But at least a great portion of the upbuilding was due not so much to war itself, as to the fact that many of the people had been given military training as an incident to the war.

Much will depend in the future as in the past upon our citizen soldiers whose past record is replete with glory. We must look to them, and must therefore have them ready for the formation of our grand armies. This education of the masses as to the true inwardness of military skill can scarcely find a better channel than through these institutions of learning where the great mass of the most intelligent youth of the land are educated. All recognize the benefit of military training. On the campus, in the class room, these young men are trained in the ways of the professional soldier. Short as the period of instruction may be—it is bound to result well in the majority of cases. Some of the finest specimens of young American manhood are among these college cadets, embryo Logans, if not Grants or Shermans.

The young men who thus graduate from our military department will have acquired habits of neatness, order, punctuality, obedience and courtesy, all of which give to the character of the man that equanimity and mastery of self so essential in a purely educational sense, and later on in the battle of life. Lieutenant F. B. Eastman, U. S. Army.

CLASSICAL EDUCATION—A DISCUSSION

MR. WASHBURN REPLIES

Professor Conover is quite right in expressing his sense of weariness, or in saying it is wearisome, to be called upon to defend his department in the college. It is a weariness that he is left to do that work, for which he is not hired by the college and for which he must take time which by right belongs to him for recreation. His position is simply that of a teacher of youth, and as he has been employed to instruct them in classical languages he should not be expected to do anything else. His position is not that of a teacher of youth, and as he has been employed to instruct them in classical languages he should not be expected to do anything else. His position is not that of a teacher of youth, and as he has been employed to instruct them in classical languages he should not be expected to do anything else.

of tribes engaged in human sacrifice than were preached in Spencer's day, and in some backward centers, today, by clergymen with classical education and hearts like that of Jonathan Edwards. That which God knows to be true will never be overturned by doubters, and Spencer, assailed by the classical bigotry of his day, did more for the cause of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ in this world than any ordained preacher of his time. To the aid of which in the church is to open the door to the true altar of a living God.

value. It is useful, but we do not want it with our bread any more than we want the dead languages in a practical education. That there is a lot of good wheat in the bread is no excuse for the chaff ground into the flour, and that there is much practical instruction at Delaware College is no excuse for the wasting of time and the obscuring of the minds of students there. The American Philological Association will doubtless approve present methods but the members of that body are poor guides to practical instruction in practical living.

It seems a little strange that Professor Conover cites the education Herbert Spencer received as being in favor of the classical course which Spencer did not receive. Not ten men since the Huns went to Rome have shown as efficient, perfectly adjusted, working power as did Spencer. His gift to the race was beyond value for it forced the whole world to think over once more its accepted views and revise many of them in the interest of truth and freedom. And he did this tremendous work; making any attempt to controvert his arguments humorous, even to the champions of the classical course, with an education that was gained, mainly, from a mathematician and a clergyman. Does not the question naturally arise: If a mathematician and a clergyman could produce the education of Herbert Spencer, may it not be true that two men, good thinkers, could, at present, do more for a youth, without classical education or a college, than the whole teaching force of an institution like that in Newark, could with them? If, as Mr. Conover implies, Mr. Spencer was not so much of a man after all, how great must have been his education, gained before he went to "railroad work at 17," to have enabled him to have attracted the attention of every student in the world and to have so wrought as to have "brought upon himself the condemnation of all orthodox clergymen," this last a feat accomplished by only a few men such as Paul, Luther, Galileo, Darwin, Emerson, Shakespeare, Roger Williams and the Wesleys.

Mr. Conover's wish that all branches of study be tested by the same utility test as is applied to the dead languages he teaches is quite fair. Higher mathematics should not be made compulsory nor taught in schools save to those having special interest in them, and always such things should be taught with due reference to their value. Latin and Greek should be relegated to the background, along with Hebrew, Persian and Chinese, and most of the history, as now taught, should go with them. In the place of present so-called histories should be taught the story of the struggle and endeavor of the human race, against medicine men, politicians, superstition, the Pharaoh and the Morgan system of exploitation, war, and the modern enslavement of which the teaching of dead tongues is a detail, be substituted for it. In the course of time we shall have a people's course of instruction, devised by men in touch with the needs of the people and calculated to develop the originality and constructive thought of the girls and boys. While education is controlled in part by fat-witted millionaires and in part by grafting politicians the courses, in spite of an intelligent few on boards of control, will be made up with reference to making the sons of the rich "bankers and gentlemen" who will be true to their class, and at the same time to making the sons of the poor orthodox rather than intelligent, commonplace rather than thinkers and contented rather than prosperous.

THE END OF TUBERCULOSIS

Value of Suppressing It.

By DR. SIMON FLEXNER.

When it is recalled that tuberculosis causes about one-third of the deaths that occur between the ages of twenty and fifty years it becomes at once apparent what an enormous influence the suppression of this one disease must exercise upon the development and progress of society. The eradication of tuberculosis is among the chief ends to be accomplished by all the agencies which are striving to uplift human society and to make its individual units more efficient and self-sustaining. Hence the conquest of tuberculosis becomes the proper field of endeavor for the statesman, legislator, physician and layman.

Fake Cures For Consumption.

By SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS.

Any nostrum which claims to cure tuberculosis is a detriment to the patient, since, if it does no worse, it at least diverts him by falsely inspired hopes from the careful regimen of life wherein lies his best chance of recovery. Tuberculosis nostrums, therefore, may be divided into the positively harmful and the negatively harmful classes. In the first class I should put all those containing opium, hashish, chloroform and any considerable quantity of alcohol. Every physician whose work takes him into the slums well knows the typical history of the consumptive working man who puts his faith in this class of nostrums. Stimulated by the alcohol or lulled by the morphine into fictitious hopefulness or security, he continues his unchanged habits of life until the final breakdown comes with appalling swiftness. To those of the medical profession I leave it to say how swiftly incipient tuberculosis becomes galloping consumption under the influence of these drugs.

THE END OF TUBERCULOSIS

Protecting the Child.

By DR. EDWARD L. TRUDEAU.

At present the most needed agencies are hospitals for advanced cases and measures to protect the child at home and at school. The advanced case is the most productive source of infection and as yet perhaps the most neglected. The need of protecting the child is shown by the fact that about 50 per cent of children living in the crowded districts become infected by the time they are five years old. Regulation of home conditions, better school hygiene, the segregation of actively tuberculous children and open air schools for those who have latent tuberculosis are measures that should be applied more extensively, the more so because the child shows a strong tendency to recover and the application of open air methods seems even more effective in children than in adults in preventing and curing the disease.

THE END OF TUBERCULOSIS

Care For Hopeless Cases.

By S. ADOLPHUS KNOPF, M. D.

The criticism has been made, and I have heard it even from medical men, that it was a waste of money to bother with the hopelessly ill; that institutional treatment should be reserved for the curably affected who could again be made breadwinners and useful citizens. Those who made these criticisms are not even right from the utilitarian point of view, much less from the humanitarian aspect of the problem. One who has had any experience at all with tuberculosis as a physician or as a social worker will know that the consumptive, no matter in what stage of the disease, if he is untrained and uncared for, constitutes a great menace in his workshop and in his home. It must be evident that if the patient is confined all the time to his bed the danger of his constituting a center of infection in a crowded bedroom, often without light and air, is very great. Such a patient, because he is not taken care of at the right time and in the right place, costs a good deal more in the end, and not infrequently additional lives are sacrificed through his condition and environments. This is my answer from the utilitarian point of view to the statement that it is a useless expenditure to take care of the seemingly hopeless cases.
