

SOCIAL EVENTS

Social Life at Delaware

The social life of the student at University of Delaware is one that is justly envied by any other college group. The Junior Promenade, Farewell Hop, the annual formal dances of the four fraternities, student council dances, informal dances of the different fraternities, house parties, dinners and smokers, are a few of the social functions.

The Junior Promenade is considered the biggest event of the collegiate year, and the one given by the class of 1921 was the first dance to be held outside of the college community. The University has grown as much in her social, as in her athletic and academic life; therefore it was necessary to select a larger and better ball room than could be secured in Newark. The idea of the committee to select this ball room was to secure the best one possible, and their idea was realized when they obtained the Gold ball room and the du Barry room of the Hotel du Pont.

The class of 1922 followed the example set by the class of 1921, and gave their promenade in the ball room of the hotel. The present Juniors profited by the experiences of the former class and sold a limited number of tickets.

The natural color of the interior decoration of the ball room was the "Gold" of Delaware's colors, and with the addition of blue shades on the lights, the Blue and Gold color scheme was perfect. No further decorations were necessary because of the beautiful and artistic interior decorating.

The programs of the two classes were made up very neatly. The one of the class of 1921 contained on its front cover a blocked "D" within which were their numerals "21." The one of the class of 1922 contained on the front cover a miniature colonial couple with "Junior Prom" embossed in golden letters below it.

For both dances the Grand March began at eight-thirty o'clock. These promenades differed very much from the promenades of years ago, when the parties were forced to content themselves with several strolls around the ball room. Instead, each fellow took his partner and swung her to and fro with the strains of the syncopated music by Madden's "Jazzy" orchestra. If one would take time to look about him, he would see each fair maiden smiling into her partner's face, a smile which told that she was very much pleased with her partner and the dance. About one o'clock refreshments were served in the du Barry room. The ice cream, cake and coffee greatly refreshed the jovial dancers for the remaining three hours of pleasure. And when the orchestra played the last strains of "Dreamy Alabama," and of "Until You Say Good-bye," everyone was indeed sorry that the end had come.

During the year two informal dances are given by each fraternity, and six informal dances by the Student Council. These events, together with the numerous house parties given at the different "frat" houses, bring the members of the student body in a closer relationship with each other, and build up a stronger spirit for Old Delaware.

We have talked practically about nothing except dances thus far; but do not forget that we have some real banquets within our walls at various times during the year. These are very pleasing to us, especially to our appetite, and we always do justice to the menu. Aside from our own banquets, outside organizations give dinners in our dining hall.

Our sisters from "down the road" share a great part of our social life, and we of theirs. On every "Open Night" the boys doll themselves up and wend their way to the doors of Residence Hall. And he who is lucky enough to receive an invitation to their Junior Prom, Farewell Hop or one of their many dinners is indeed fortunate and is always assured a good time.

Each fraternity gives an annual dance some time during the collegiate year. The Sigma Nu and Kappa Alpha Fraternities hold their dances in the Armory; the Sigma Phi Epsilon and Omega Alpha Fraternities hold their dances in Old College.

Each fraternity takes great interest in its dance, and many hours are spent in decorating the hall. Festoons and streamers in the fraternity colors form a greater portion of the decorations. The lights are shaded with certain designs of flowers. The decorations are, as far as possible, in accordance with the season of the year. Banners and pennants are placed upon the walls.

The programs are very neatly arranged. They contain the name of the fraternity, what annual dance it is, the place and time it was given, the order of dances, the names of patronesses, and the chapter roll.

Each one of the happy dancers enjoys a menu similar to the following: Chicken salad, finger rolls, ice cream, cakes, coffee, nuts and mints.
