

EVERY EVENING

Wilmington, Delaware, December

George S. Messersmith, formerly of Delaware, now United States Consul General at Berlin, it now develops, had nothing to do with the questioning, the other day, of Professor Albert Einstein when the latter was seeking a visa for his passport to come to this country. The original report of the incident gave a contrary impression. According to a statement authorized by several organizations of Americans in Berlin, Consul General Messersmith was out of the city when Professor Einstein was examined, the examination being conducted by Consul Raymond B. Geist. The latter, however, according to the same authority, acquitted himself in a creditable and proper manner. It is of interest to Delawareans to know that Mr. Messersmith was not connected with the incident.
