For Every Dream Come True, There's A Rude Awakening

Maloney

"Follow Pete!" Pete's gonna break the crowd!" Pete du Pont broke more than the crowd last night as he led his party to a sweep of the gubernatorial, senatorial, and congressional races.

The mob at Republican headquarters in the Wilmington Manor Lions Club was primed and ready for the happy event. The troops milled quietly at first with appropriate paraphernalia—buttons, beer, cigars, straw hats, and lucky St. Bernards—all the necessary extras for a successful campaign.

Just about everyone was glued to the tube waiting for the numbers to flash on. Embroidered collars and hard hats alike cheered at Ford's slim wins and stood silent while Carter pulled in states.

National committee chairwoman Pricilla Rakestraw completed the scene by coaching, "If some of those reporters come around for spot interviews, be sure to smile pretty and flash every Republican button you've got... this will be the biggest Republican victory party we've ever had."

With plenty of sauce on hand, the elbows bent with regularity til 10:30 p.m. when the men of the hour began to arrive. A supportive roar came from the crowd as Bill Roth stepped up to the mike and declared, "The time for speeches is over."

Everyone seemed to agree. Victory is the time for hugs and handshakes. "Could you hang around here and shake some hands, cuz we need some set-up, Governor." "I just gave Pete du Pont a hug, ha ha." "Now there's a face from the past. How ya doing..."

From his red-striped tie to the perfect crease in his pants, du Pont was the picture of poise that everyone expected. Addressing the crowd in his victory smile du Pont told them, "I think the people of the state of Delaware have shown tonight that they're ready for a change, new ideas, better ways of doing things, more open responsive government, and to make Delaware a better place to live."

Roth, too, got his reward early. Maybe now, he won't have to wear that big button so people will know who he is.

Tom Evans made a more inconspicuous entrance, however. "Tommy's out there. Could you get him in here?"

"We have an uphill battle and it's good to be a bit ahead," he said cautiously. "You know I don't like to count the chickens before they're hatched."

But by 12:30 a.m., a red dot was put by Evans' name on the board and the time for worry was over—the sweep was in the bag.

With characteristic charisma, the Governor-elect said it for them all, "For a bunch of kids, we didn't do too bad."

Tribbitt

A festive cocktail-party atmosphere prevailed at the Kent County Democratic headquarters, despite the quick convincing defeat of Gov. Sherman W. Tribbitt.

Campaign workers took solace in the apparent Carter triumph and numerous in-state party victories.

Tribbitt, who spent most of last night in his Dover home, paid a ten-minute visit to the County headquarters at 11:30 p.m., nearly three hours after he had been projected a loser by ABC News.

"I'm not bitter," he said, "I've aspired all my life to be governor of Delaware and I've had that opportunity. I wanted to be a two-term governor but it didn't work out that way."

He was warmly applauded but, soon after his departure, the now-dissipating crowd turned its attention back to the party's more successful races.

An air of defeat prevailed last night long before Thomas C. Maloney, Democratic mayor of Wilmington, entered the Regency Ball Room North of the Brandywine Hilton to make his concession speech.

Upon arrival Maloney was showered with the tears and kisses of loyal supporters while strains from "For He's A Jolly Good Fellow" drifted across the room.

After thanking the crowd, Maloney reflected on his campaign, saying, "It was a very interesting experience. I learned a lot," he added.

As for his future plans, he said, "I'll take one day at a time."

Shipley

The crowd was tense as Sam Shipley, Democratic candidate for U.S. Congress, walked into the Wilmington Ramada Inn.

Television reports said that Shipley was trailing and the candidate himself conceded to the crowd. "It doesn't look good at all."

As the final tallies rolled in, Shipley conjectured that the telling factor in the election was the lead Tom Evans, the Republican candidate, took in Kent County.

He also attributed his loss to the lack of organization among Democrats in Delaware. "It's a sick party," he said.

Shipley expressed gratitude to his supporters saying, "We've done not only what we can, but what we thought was right."

Newark Voters Discuss Issues In Tuesday's Balloting

Interviews by Tim Biringier

Helen Ely cited Ford's "experience" as justification for voting for him. She said she was a registered Republican and also voted for du Pont for governor and Roth for United States Senator. Roth's "done a good job for us," she said. Ely said she voted against the slot machine question because "Delaware doesn't need to stoop that low for revenue."

Katherine Rewa said she voted for Carter. She said she was not strongly in favor of Carter and was "turned off" by the campaign tactics of both parties. Rewa said she was planning to vote for Eugene McCarthy until she realized how close the election might be.

Cathy Turrill, an Arts and Sciences doctoral candidate, said she "went to Carter on his policies of nuclear energy, defense spending, and amnesty." She added, "I don't like Dole." She said she voted a "straight Democratic ticket." Regarding slot machines in Delaware, she said, "it's not a very good idea."

John Gibbons, a retired Chrysler worker, said because Ford and Nixon voted against increases for Social Security, he voted for Carter. Carter is "for the working people," he added. Gibbons criticized current United States foreign policy and said he believes we are selling armaments to our enemies.

George McVeigh, a machine operator, said he voted for Carter. "We need a change and the Democrats offer more for the country domestically." He said the country needs an "honest" and "realistic" approach to government. McVeigh said he voted in support of slot machines in Delaware.

Travis Ray, a Chrysler worker, said he voted for Carter because "I don't trust Ford," for his pardoning of Richard Nixon. Ray acknowledged Ford's "technical" understanding of the workings of government, but said he thinks Carter will bring "welfare rolls down." Concerning slot machines, he said he voted "yes," adding, "Why shouldn't we have them?"

Charles Dorcy, a senior education major said he voted for Carter. "It's time for a change," he said. He expressed concern about high rates of unemployment and inflation. He added that he is not necessarily "anti-Ford." Dorcy said he voted for Pete du Pont for governor and voted "yes" on the slot machine question.

John Hagee, a real estate salesman, said he did not know who he would vote for before entering the voting booth. He said a "gut feeling" convinced him to cast a vote for Ford. He said he is "afraid of too much government" and believes private business must "generate the economy." Hagee added that he is "basically a Democrat," but that he also voted for du Pont for governor.
