Newark couple aims to start Delaware Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame

By JACOB OWENS

For George and Paula Wolkind, music — and especially local music — was more than a soundtrack to their youth; it was the ties that bound it.

George moved to Wilmington from New York City when he was a teen, while Paula was born and raised in George Read Village in Newark.

"My husband was a popular singer in Snakegrinder, and I was at every dance at every high school and fire hall," Paula said. "We remember those days fondly and want to hold onto those times."

Yet as the years have gone by, they've come to realize

Women's March looks to election

Hundreds of Newarkers march for women's rights

By JOSH SHANNON

Hundreds of Newarkers took to the streets Saturday, joining thousands of people nationwide marching in support of women's rights.

This year's marches were intended to build on the efforts of the first Women's March, which was held the day after President Donald Trump was inaugurated.

"Now we're a year older and wiser," said Karen Barker, who helped organize the Women's March on Newark. "We have a better sense of the work that needs to be done."

The marchers began at the Unitarian Universalist Fellowship of Newark on Willa

Road crews are 'attacking' potholes, city officials say

By JOSH SHANNON

jshannon@chespub.com

Recent winter weather has taken its toll on Newark's roads, but officials say crews are working to address the large number of potholes.

"We're attacking them as best we can," Acting City Manager Tom Coleman said last week. "Once you get into these freeze/thaw cycles is when the roads start to fall apart."

Coleman addressed the issue in response to comments from several council members about an increase in potholes.

"I've noticed a whole lot of potholes opening up, kind of all over the city," District 1 Councilman Mark Morehead said.

Coleman said public works crews are working overtime, including weekends.

However, cold weather makes it difficult to provide a lasting fix, he said. The factories that make hot-mix asphalt only operate when the weather is warmer, leaving the city to rely on cold-patch asphalt to fill the potholes, which is not as effective.

"It will stay in until it rains, then it will come out, and we have to do it again," Coleman said.

The city recently purchased a piece of equipment to make its own hot-mix for repairing potholes, but it is out of service for repairs for several more weeks, Coleman said. He added that he hopes a hot-mix plant will open soon if Delaware sees a warm spell.

Newark rehires grant-writing consultant

By JOSH SHANNON

jshannon@chespub.com

After a six-month pilot program, Newark City Council has agreed to retain the services of an outside grant-writing consultant.

Under the contract approved Monday night, the city will pay New Jersey-based Millennium Strategies $48,000 for the year – paid as a retainer on a monthly basis – to identify grant opportunities and assist the city in applying for them.

"There's a synergy here that seems to be working well," Councilman Jerry Clifton said.

The city hired the firm on a trial basis in July, and since then, the company has secured $275,000 in grants, including $100,000 for the controversial pedestrian/bicycle bridge over White Clay Creek, $100,000 for police equipment and overtime and $75,000 for Preston's Playground.

The company submitted applications for an additional $143,000, and the city is waiting to hear if it was selected for those grants.

Although Newark has applied for grants using in-house staff in the past, Deputy City Manager Andrew Haines said using Millennium Strategies allows the city to compete for grants it otherwise would not have had time to apply for.

For example, with the firm's help, the city recently applied for a $100,000 grant from the Federal Emergency Management Agency to purchase a backup generator. Officials found out about the grant only three days before the deadline.

"If not for Millennium Strategies, staff would not have been able to complete the application by the deadline," Haines wrote in a memo to council members. "FEMA confirmed with Millennium Strategies that Newark was the sole applicant. This application alone provides a return on investment for the fixed cost of their service."

Council voted unanimously to waive the bid requirement and approve the contract.

EPA PUBLIC NOTICE

Newark Site now part of Superfund List

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) announces the listing of the Newark South Groundwater Plume Site to the National Priorities List (NPL), a list of sites eligible for long-term remedial (cleanup) action financed under the federal Superfund program. This Site was proposed to the NPL in August 2017 and EPA held a public information session that same month. The next steps in the Superfund process will be a full investigation of the Site and the contamination.

Community Involvement – We want to meet you!

EPA will be preparing a Community Involvement Plan (CIP), a Site-specific roadmap to inform and engage the community in the Superfund process. To develop the CIP, EPA conducts community interviews, in person or over the phone, with residents, local and elected officials, and other stakeholders to gather information, identify key community needs, concerns, and questions. If you are interested in being interviewed, please contact us at one of the numbers below.

Preston's Playground construction to begin in April

Equipment arrives in Delaware after $500K fundraising effort

By JOSH SHANNON

jshannon@chespub.com

The organizers behind Preston's Playground are one step closer to making their dream a reality after the equipment for the handicapped-accessible playground arrived in Delaware last week.

It's the latest step in a massive, community-wide effort that began more than two years ago and raised $500,000.

Construction will begin in April and take between two and four weeks, said Nic DeCaire, who helped spearhead the project.

"The community has waited long enough," DeCaire said. "We have to get this thing built for them."

Named for Preston Buenaga, a Wilmington teen who has mitochondrial disease, the playground is meant to allow all children – regardless of disabilities – to play together in a safe, accessible space.

The project is the brainchild of Preston's mother, Deb, who was inspired by a similar playground the family visited while on vacation in Virginia. She joined forces with DeCaire, with whom she had worked on other philanthropic projects, and they started raising money in the summer of 2015.

The Newark Parks and Recreation Department agreed to dedicate space for the playground at the base of the Newark Reservoir and take care of the ongoing maintenance. The 6,000-square-foot playground will feature a rubber play surface and equipment that allows children in wheelchairs to play side-by-side with their non-disabled peers. Three accessible entrances will accommodate kids with wheelchairs, braces or other mobility issues.

Deb Buenaga stressed that the playground is not just intended for kids with disabilities but will be designed to accommodate and appeal to all children.

"It's all about them being able to play together," she said previously.

Both she and DeCaire expect the park to draw visitors from surrounding areas.

The initial fundraising goal was $250,000 but doubled over time as plans for the playground expanded. After contributions from numerous people and corporations and dozens of fundraising events, DeCaire and Buenaga hit their goal late last year.

SUBMITTED IMAGE

An artist's rendering shows what Preston's Playground will look like. Wheelchair ramps and other features will allow kids with and without disabilities to play together.

They are still raising money to build handicapped-accessible bathrooms at the site of the playground, but DeCaire said construction of the playground will progress regardless of the status of the bathrooms.

Last week, employees from Hopkins & Sons Moving and Storage made two trips to Georgia to pick up the playground equipment from the manufacturer. The New Castle-based company will store the equipment in its warehouse until April.

The company donated its services, saving the playground fund more than $17,000 in shipping fees, DeCaire said.

Meanwhile, several local contractors have agreed to help install the playground, and some donors will be invited to participate in community work days. Sometime in late April or early May, the playground will open.

DeCaire said it hasn't quite sunk in that the playground is finally about to come to fruition.

"I haven't physically touched it yet, so for me it's not real yet," he said. "But it will be a great feeling once it's built."

Newark man charged with 5th DUI after crashing Jeep

By JOSH SHANNON
jshannon@chespub.com

A Newark man is facing his fifth drunken-driving charge after crashing his Jeep last week, police reported.

The crash happened at 6:44 p.m. Jan. 19 near the intersection of Llangollen Boulevard and South Dupont Highway, south of New Castle, according to Master Cpl. Melissa Jaffe, a spokeswoman for the Delaware State Police.

Ryan P. Ott, 52, was driving his Jeep Cherokee west on Llangollen Boulevard when he crossed into the opposite lane and struck the left side of a Ford F-150 pickup truck, Jaffe said. No one was injured.

When troopers arrived, they smelled alcohol on Ott and charged him with DUI and inattentive driving. Ott has four previous convictions for DUI, making the new charge a felony, Jaffe said.

He was committed to the Howard R. Young Correctional Institution in lieu of $5,000 cash bond.

Four people rob gas station at knifepoint

By JOSH SHANNON
jshannon@chespub.com

Police are searching for four people who robbed a Newark-area gas station at knifepoint early Monday morning.

The robbery happened just before 1 a.m. at the Exxon at 4600 Ogletown-Stanton Road, east of Newark, according to Master Cpl. Michael Austin, a spokesman for Delaware State Police.

Two women entered the gas station and began browsing the store as if they were looking to buy something, Austin said. Moments later, two men entered the store and confronted the sales clerk.

One man displayed a knife, while the other implied he had a gun, Austin said.

The employee "vaulted the counter" and ran out of the store, while the robbers took cash and cigarettes, Austin said. No one was injured.

Police described the robbers only as two black men and two black women, all wearing dark clothes. The men had their faces covered. They were last seen heading north on Harmony Road.

Police did not release any surveillance photos.

Anyone with information about the robbery should contact the DSP at 302-365-8566. Information may also be provided by calling Delaware crime stoppers at 1-800-TIP-3333 or via the internet at <http://www.delaware.crimestoppersweb.com>.

Police believe this man stole brake pads from the Pep Boys in College Square Shopping Center.

Police searching for man who stole brake pads from Pep Boys

By JOSH SHANNON
jshannon@chespub.com

Police are asking for the public's help locating a man who stole brake pads from the Pep Boys in College Square Shopping Center.

The theft happened as the store was preparing to close at 9 p.m. Jan 19, according to Sgt. Gerald Bryda, a spokesman for the Newark Police Department.

The thief walked up to the counter with three pairs of brake pads, and the employee began scanning the items for payment. When the employee looked away, the thief grabbed the brake pads – worth a total of $121 – and ran out of the store.

The thief was described as a white man with reddish hair and was wearing a dark gray sweatshirt with the Nike logo on it, blue jeans and a backward baseball cap. He left in a dark sedan with what appeared to be Maryland tags. Two other people were in the car.

Anyone with information regarding this incident should contact Officer Megan Keating at MKeating@newark.de.us or 302-366-7100, ext. 3489.

Man trapped, dragged while trying to stop car from rolling down hill

By JOSH SHANNON
jshannon@chespub.com

A man escaped with only minor injuries after he was trapped under a car and dragged down a hill while trying to stop the vehicle from rolling away, police said.

The incident happened at 7 p.m. Jan. 19 in the unit block of Ray Street, according to Sgt. Gerald Bryda, a spokesman for the Newark Police Department.

The driver of the 2009 Honda Accord, a 19-year-old woman from New York, parked her car near a house and was getting items out of the vehicle.

As the car began rolling down a hill next to the house, a 20-year-old New York man who was walking in front of the car sprang into action.

"He instinctively tried to stop the vehicle," Bryda said. "This is when he went under the front bumper and was dragged down the hill."

The car eventually came to a stop when it hit a shed, and the man was able to free himself. The victim was not run over by the car's tires and reported only a minor injury to his nose, Bryda said.

No charges were filed.

Vandal sets fire to Christmas tree behind College Square

By JOSH SHANNON
jshannon@chespub.com

A vandal ignited a Christmas tree behind the College Square Shopping Center on Monday night, police said.

Police and firefighters were called to an alley behind the Pizza Hut at 9:11 p.m., but the tree had already burned itself out, according to Sgt. Gerald Bryda, a spokesman for the Newark Police Department.

No suspect description or surveillance images were released.

"The case is being investigated as disorderly conduct, as it created a hazardous condition in the shopping center," Bryda said.

Anyone with information regarding this incident should contact Officer Matthew Coughlin at MCoughlin@newark.de.us or 302-366-7100, ext. 3143.

Man charged with firing gun during altercation on Madison Drive

By JOSH SHANNON

jshannon@chespub.com

A New Castle man was arrested after allegedly firing a gun in the College Park neighborhood of Newark, police reported.

The incident happened just before 11:30 p.m. Jan. 17 in the 100 block of Madison Drive, said Lt. Fred Nelson, a spokesman for the Newark Police Department.

The 39-year-old victim told police he was walking in the area and met Dawane A. Warren, 22, who was sitting in his car with his girlfriend in front of his mother's house. The victim said his wife had kicked him out of the house and he was cold, court records indicate.

Warren's girlfriend allowed the victim to get in the car to warm up, and soon the victim got into an altercation with Warren, Nelson said.

The victim got out of the car and heard a gunshot as he ran away, but he was not hit. He then drove to the Sunoco gas station and the Greene Turtle restaurant before finally heading to the police station to report the shooting, approximately 30 minutes after it happened.

WARREN

Police, meanwhile, had already received calls about the gunshot, but arriving officers found nothing suspicious.

After the victim filed his report, officers went back to the scene and found Warren and his girlfriend still parked on Madison Drive. They searched his car and found a 9mm handgun.

It does not appear the bullet hit anything, Nelson said.

Exactly what happened when the victim was inside the car remains unclear, according to court documents.

The victim claimed Warren pulled out a handgun unprovoked and stole his wallet, credit card and vaporizer, court records indicate.

However, the arresting officer wrote in court documents that "there is some question as to the truthfulness of [the victim's] entire statement," noting that his body language indicated deception.

Warren's girlfriend claimed that the victim offered them cocaine and asked if they wanted to party. She admitted she used cocaine with the victim, and said Warren was angry that the victim had brought drugs into the car and asked him to leave, court documents indicate.

The victim continued to snort cocaine in the back seat, and the confrontation escalated, she told police. Both the victim and Warren got out of the car, and the woman heard a gunshot but did not see Warren pull the trigger. She said the victim dropped the items he later reported stolen.

According to court documents, Warren admitted to police that he fired one shot into the air but claimed it was unintentional. He denied that he threatened the victim with the gun and instead said the victim saw a lighter than resembles a handgun.

Warren was charged with carrying a concealed deadly weapon, reckless endangerment and aggravated menacing. He was released on $10,000 secured bond.

Second arrest made in Newark home invasion

One suspect still sought

By JOSH SHANNON

jshannon@chespub.com

Police have arrested a second person and identified a third in connection with a home invasion and shooting in Newark earlier this month.

Rasean T. Henry, 23, of Bear, turned himself in to Newark Police Department headquarters Jan. 17, according to NPD spokesman Lt. Fred Nelson.

Additionally, detectives obtained an arrest warrant for Curtis Bridges, 19, of Newark, and are asking for the public's help locating him.

The incident happened at 10:20 p.m. Jan. 9 in the unit block of North Street, a short residential street just north of Cleveland Avenue, Nelson said.

Three men broke in through a window and threatened the residents with a handgun. The students, men ages 20, 20 and 22, attempted to hide, and one of the men fired a shot in their direction, Nelson said. No one was injured, but detectives later found a bullet hole near the stairwell of the house.

One of the victims managed to call police, and an officer arrived to find three people jumping out of a window. The officer gave chase, and caught John K. Sarmousakis, 17, of Newark, hiding in a dumpster, Nelson said.

With the assistance of a Delaware State Police helicopter and officers from the UD and New Castle County police departments, Newark Police searched the area for the other two suspects, but

The victims reported that nothing was taken from the home.

According to court documents, police identified the other suspects based on information provided by Sarmousakis' father, who lives a mile from the North Street home. The father told police that shortly after the incident, Henry showed up at his house looking for Sarmousakis, apparently unaware he had been arrested.

The father told police that Henry was sweaty – as though he had been running – which the father found odd because it was cold outside. According to court documents, Henry told the father that he and Sarmousakis had just been together but got separated. The father said his son and Henry are friends.

The following day, Henry was arrested following an unrelated domestic dispute. Police searched his phone, found text messages that indicate a conspiracy to steal items and obtained an additional arrest warrant.

Sarmousakis and Henry were charged with home invasion, reckless endangerment, conspiracy and attempted robbery. Sarmousakis was committed to the New Castle County Detention Center in lieu of $112,000 cash bail, and Henry was committed to the Howard Young Correctional Institution in lieu of $61,000 secured bond.

Bridges will face identical charges, Nelson said.

Anyone with information about the whereabouts of Bridges should contact Det. James Skinner at JSkinner@newark.de.us or 302-366-7100, ext. 3135.

Former Newarker travels world with songs of Madison Drive

By DARA MCBRIDE
Special to the Post

In addition to Newark's Home Grown Café and Argilla Brewing Company, music has taken independent folk artist Shane Palko to Thailand, Australia and South Africa, among many other places.

Palko, 29, expects to be on the road for about half of 2018. He left for his current tour through Latin America, which started in Pennsylvania and extends to Panama, on Dec. 8 and plans to return home Feb. 26.

For Palko, music is a way to share ideas and bring people together.

"We want to give to our neighbors, because right now the political climate is not great, and so what we want to do is just play shows for free and be here with the people," said Palko, speaking by phone while traveling between Honduras and Nicaragua on Tuesday.

He's been making the journey with two friends – bass player Tyler Yoder, a Newark resident who has his own band, Milieu Lust, and drummer Evan Stout – and writing almost every day. Palko expects to perform at least two concerts in each country, about 30 concerts total, by the end of the trip. His goal is to keep the international concerts free, using funds raised at his U.S. performances.

Palko, who grew up in Landenberg, Pa., and intends to build a home there someday, came to music at a young age and initially formed a band with two of his brothers. He counts Newark-born band Boysenfire as influential for showing him "music could be a way of communicating ideas and not just pretty sounds."

Palko didn't expect to be touring his music all over the world. He attended the University of Delaware, where he studied human services and writing. When he is in the area, he works as a socioenvironmental education specialist at NorthBay Adventure Camp in North East, Md., which puts children in touch with the environment.

Throughout all his work is a celebration of place.

"I'm really fascinated by the way people connect to an area, and how it's important to have a home and an appreciation for the place that you're from," Palko said.

The idea to travel as much as possible came when Palko was a teenager. One summer, he said, he filled in as a drummer with a Christian band touring Thailand. Because of his young age, he didn't venture far from the group. But, "mesmerized by all the life and culture," Palko said he vowed he would return with his own music as soon as he was old enough.

He began putting out one album per year starting in 2009, and each year tries to return to as many countries as possible, plus a few more.

Palko's latest album, Madison Drive, is named after his "favorite neighborhood in Newark." Known as one of Newark's rougher areas, Madison Drive is where Palko chose to live for four years.

"I think Madison gets a bad rap in the Newark area, but I absolutely love that place," Palko said. "There's so many different kinds of people living there, and we had so much fun getting to know people."

He didn't intend to write a Madison Drive album, but when it came time to record new work, he realized he had 30-plus songs inspired by the place. The album was recorded in his Madison Drive home on an eight-track tape machine.

The album's "Staring Out The Window" – a rhythmic, melancholy tune featuring guitar, bass and drums – brings Palko's worlds together. The music video for the Madison Drive song was filmed during a recent trip to Uganda.

His travels will continue later this year with music projects in Tanzania and Uganda.

"There's not really much I need. I have my guitar and I can throw some shirts in the guitar case," Palko said. "It's a pretty simple life."

Orioles center fielder Adam Jones, appearing via video chat, answers a question from Jennie E. Smith Elementary School fifth-grader Caylee Riggi.

Orioles star Adam Jones talks to Newark elementary students

By JOSH SHANNON

jshannon@chespub.com

A big fan of the Baltimore Orioles, Marlon Sparks said he was speechless when he found out earlier this month that he would get a chance to talk to O's slugger Adam Jones.

"It was really cool," the Jennie E. Smith Elementary School fifth-grader said. "I was really shocked."

On Monday, Marlon was first in line to ask a question to Jones, who spoke to the students via video chat from his home in San Diego. Three classes of fifth-graders gathered in the gymnasium and watched on a big screen as Jones took questions for more than half an hour.

The virtual visit was arranged by music teacher Kim Schussler, who is a lifelong Orioles fan. She met Jones at a charity event and stayed in touch with him through social media. She asked if he would speak to her students and, to her surprise, he agreed.

"He was so easy to work with," Schussler said. "He's so humble and so laid back. He's one of the most special people I've ever met."

She and other teachers designed lessons around Jones' talk, teaching the students how to research the center fielder's career and develop questions.

Many of the questions revolved around how to become a professional athlete, to which Jones responded that it's important to work hard, exercise and eat right.

"If you put your head down and work at it, why can't you be in the major leagues?" he said.

Another student asked him how he responds to negative comments on social media.

"I just retweet it and let everyone see they're being a moron," Jones said, noting he's been called all sorts of names. "You're wasting your time calling me that. I don't even know your name."

Many of the students were fascinated by Jones' tradition of celebrating wins by smashing pies in his teammates' faces. He started out making pies with shaving cream, but now a local bakery delivers three pies to the stadium before games, he said.

"Instead of tasting shaving cream, you taste pie, and it tastes good," Jones added, laughing.

Fifth-grader Gabriel Amankwa said he enjoyed getting to ask Jones a question.

"It was super cool. It was my first time talking to anyone famous," he said. "He really inspired me to follow my dream of being a basketball player."

Classmate Kayla Parks, who lifts weights and plays basketball, agreed.

"I really liked it when he said to stay active and that anybody in the room could be an athlete," she said. "He seems to be a very humble guy, and you don't see that a lot in celebrities."

Hundreds of people participated in the Women's March on Newark on Saturday morning.

Road, walked to Main Street and then returned to the church, where several politicians and activists addressed the crowd.

While last year's march was about expressing concern over the direction Trump was taking the country, this year's was about channeling that anger into action – particularly at the polls this November.

"Last year, people were getting activated and motivated. Now, it's time to take that a step further," said march organizer Donna Shand, who estimated the crowd between 800 and 1,000 people.

Speaker after speaker encouraged the women in attendance to vote for female candidates – and consider running for office themselves.

"Washington and Dover, you are on notice," Democratic state senate candidate Laura Sturgeon said, drawing cheers from the crowd. "Change is coming, and it's wearing a pink hat."

Sturgeon, a teacher at Concord High School and a board member of the state teacher's union, is challenging Republican State Sen. Greg Lavelle in District 4, which encompasses Greenville, Hockessin and part of Pike Creek. She said she wants to be part of the "pink wave" of female candidates energized by Trump's election.

An early example of that "pink wave" is Stephanie Hansen, who addressed last year's Women's March as a candidate and returned Saturday as a state senator.

Hansen, a Democrat, was elected last February in a special election for the District 10 state senate seat vacated by newly elected Lt. Gov. Bethany Hall-Long. The race drew national attention and garnered nearly $1 million in donations. Democrats framed it as voters' first chance to strike back at Trump, and the GOP viewed it as a chance to take control of the state senate for the first time in four decades.

Hansen told the crowd Saturday that she saw first-hand the concern many women had as she campaigned door-to-door in the days and weeks after Trump's inauguration.

"[Some] came to the door so distressed, they were actually in tears," she recalled, noting the sense of despair soon morphed. "It turned to anger, then turned to resolve."

State Rep. Paul Baumbach challenged the marchers to vote in every election regardless of how uninteresting it may seem and to support candidates who share their values even if the candidate isn't perfect.

"Politics can suck," Baumbach said. "Most issues are boring as heck. Politicians can be boring as heck."

Still, he argued, it's important to vote. "We can turn every election in every district if we turn out," he said.

Dounya Ramadan, a Newark Charter School student who runs the school's Feminist Club, said she's "tired of waking up every day to an unjust world" and called for an end to discrimination and division based on race, gender and national origin.

"We are humans above all," Ramadan, 17, said. "What should stand out is our unity and commonality."

Canal softball named DSBA Team of the Year

By JON BUZBY

JonBuzby@hotmail.com

Last summer, a team of 11- and 12-year-old girls representing Canal Little League won the hearts of Delawareans as they competed in the Little League Majors Softball World Series in Portland, Ore.

Canal's accomplishments along the way – winning the state and regional tournaments without a loss – and a third-place finish at the World Series has earned them the "Team of the Year" award, as voted on by members of the Delaware Sportswriters and Broadcasters Association.

"This award for me personally and the team is an honor we will never forget," manager Rich Trala said. "How often can you say you managed or played on a team that won team of the year in the State of Delaware? With all the great teams from all the high schools and colleges down to the Little Leagues from the state of Delaware, it's truly an amazing honor to receive this prestigious award."

After winning four straight games to capture the state title, Canal traveled to Bristol, Conn., and found similar success at the Eastern Regional Tournament. Canal won its first four games in Bristol, and then clinched a berth in the World Series with a 10-4 win over New York-Monroe Woodbury.

"I enjoyed coaching these girls this past summer, watching them grow into good players and young ladies," Trala said. "They worked hard and fought through adversity with class."

"Every girl on this team was talented," he added. "We had good hitters. We had speed and great pitching. They sacrificed a lot and worked very hard to achieve their goal of going to the World Series. They are the true meaning of the word TEAM - Together Everyone Achieves More. My coaches and I were honored to coach such wonderful young ladies."

The experience of traveling across the country and playing on national television was just as memorable as the games.

"The fondest memory has to be the way the girls matured during the journey," Trala said. "They spent a lot of time together. The traveling, the practices, the games, the interviews and being away from family. These girls handled everything and represented themselves, their families, Canal Little League and the state of Delaware with maturity. These girls enjoyed the games but they also enjoyed time spent with each other."

Since their return to Delaware, the girls have enjoyed being the toast of the town. The team was honored at a Delaware football game, and local businesses provided various services and gifts to make them feel special about their success.

"The girls were treated like rock stars," Trala said. "Everywhere the girls went, friends, family and strangers were congratulating them on such a great accomplishment."

Trinidad Navarro and Kevin Maloney served as assistant coaches. The players were Hannah Chambers, Brooklyn Richardson, Hailee Trala, Hannah Navarro, Ashlee

Trala, Kylie Parker, Madison Parisi, Rylee Maloney, Kylie Saienni, Olivia Stubblebine, Mikayla Walsh, Sara Ann Sobocinski and Liv Marinucci. Melissa Navarro and Susan Trala served as team parents.

"As a league, we are just so proud of our girls on many levels," Canal president Chris Cavaioli said. "From their commitment to put in the hard work to get better individually and as a team to their poise and sportsmanship on the Little League World Series stage. We already have heard from parents and kids wanting to register and play softball at Canal because of what our girls did last year, hoping they can do the same. Our 'rock stars' have become true role models here in Delaware."

The team will be honored at the DSBA luncheon on Feb. 19 at the Sheraton Wilmington South. Several other awards will also be presented that day, including the Delaware Athlete of the Year. Finalists are Chris Godwin (Tampa Bay Buccaneers), Chad Kuhl (Pittsburgh Pirates), Will Knight (Smyrna High School football), Duron Harmon (New England Patriots), Greta Nauck (UD field hockey), Madison Brengle (professional tennis player) and Morgan Hurd (world champion gymnast). The winner will be announced at the luncheon.

Tickets to the luncheon are $35 and can be purchased at www.delaports.org.

The Pond Ice Arena gets new owners and new name

The Pond Ice Arena, located on John Campbell Road off Marrows Road, will be rebranded as The Patriot Ice Center.

By JOSH SHANNON

jshannon@chespub.com

The Pond Ice Arena now has new owners and a new name.

Alex Bohatiuk and Mark Cardillo, who have run a hockey team based there for 17 years, recently purchased the arena and renamed it The Patriot Ice Center.

"I'm really excited about this opportunity," Cardillo said. "It's the next step in continuing a landmark in our community and furthering our mission of creating access for everyone who wants to try out skating or hockey on any level."

He said previous owner Bob Campbell quietly put the business on the market, and Cardillo decided to join forces with Bohatiuk to purchase it.

"We see value," he said. "We see a program that's good and can be great."

Built in 1996, the arena located off Marrows Road features two rinks, one built to Olympics specifications and one built to NHL specifications.

The arena's main draw is hockey, Cardillo said. It is home to a number of youth and adult hockey leagues and also hosts high school hockey games, including the Newark High School team.

The arena also hosts figure skaters – among its claims to fame was serving as a training base for two-time Olympian Johnny Weir – as well as public skate sessions, skating camps for kids and the Diamond State Curling Club.

The arena serves 1,000 hockey players, and approximately 350,000 people come through the doors each year, Cardillo said.

He said he plans to make some needed facilities upgrades but intends to keep the programs and activities the same with only slight modifications.

The new name comes from the Pond Patriots, a youth hockey team based at the arena. Cardillo said he hopes the rebranding creates "a new feeling of energy."

Looking back at Newark's successes in 2017

Mayor's Corner

disturbances. It minimizes the number of customers impacted and decreased the restoration time from two to three hours to three to four minutes. A true testament to being committed to service excellence.

2017 was a productive year for our city. As we kick off a new year, I'd like to highlight some of the progress we've made with the support of city employees, residents and businesses under direction from city council.

Being good financial stewards is not only the right thing to do – it allows us to operate more effectively and efficiently. This past year, the city was once again affirmed for its stable financial outlook by both Fitch Ratings and Moody's Investor Services. The city has held AA+ and AA2 ratings with these agencies since 2010, and both agencies highlight the city's revenue and expenditure framework, long-term liability burden and our overall operating performance in their reports.

Our strong financial standing affords us the opportunity to make improvements to our infrastructure and we saw great progress this year in that respect. We invested more than $3 million to improve our water, sewer and street infrastructure. Most of the recommendations of the Cleveland Avenue Task Force were also approved, which will improve safety along the corridor for all who travel our roads. My fellow council members and I also approved a stormwater utility, which takes effect this month and dedicates funding to maintain and improve the city's stormwater infrastructure.

Connectivity throughout the city and the infrastructure of our 33 parks and 17 miles of trail also improved in 2017. The city installed a bicycle shelter on the Pomeroy Trail just off East Main Street, and fitness stations were installed on the Pomeroy Trail and at Olan Thomas Park. The Rittenhouse Park bridge received much-needed rehabilitation as well.

Our improvements didn't stop there – the electric department continues to improve reliability throughout the city. This past year, it installed an auto-restoration system that integrates real-time data from the distribution system to detect

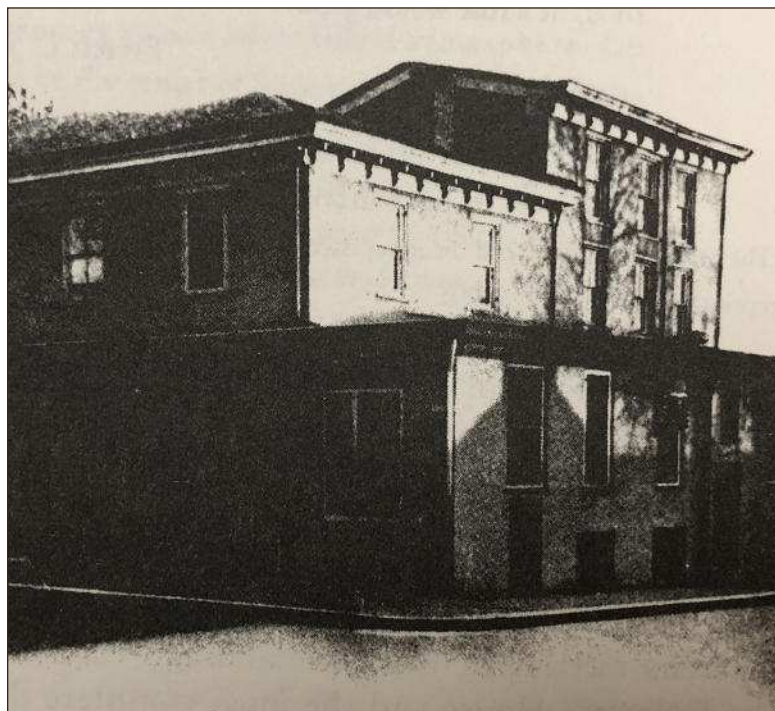

Another group epitomizing customer service excellence are the men and women of the Newark Police Department. They celebrated 150 years of serving and protecting the citizens of Newark in 2017 and continued to increase the positive interactions they have with members of our community through programs like the citizens' police academy, trading card project, National Night Out and Shop with A Cop.

Engaging, educating and empowering Newark residents to be more involved was the focus of the city's communications team – and they made great progress in 2017. From launching the city's award-winning, redesigned, mobile-friendly website and livestreaming council meetings, to producing Newark News Briefs and distributing monthly newsletters in utility bills, they expanded and enhanced our outreach efforts and provided more opportunities for everyone to learn about what's new in Newark.

City employees serve the community in more than just their official capacity – and 2017 was no exception. Many city employees have served in the armed services; they have supported community-wide efforts such as the Delmarva blood drive, holiday food drive, and Toys for Tots. Independently, many participate in community clean-ups, mentor students at McVey Elementary School or organize independent donation efforts to support Family Promise.

I'm continually awed and inspired by so many in our community who go above and beyond to ensure Newark remains a great place to live, work and visit. Thank you for your role in making 2017 a wonderful year. Looking forward, we have many challenges and opportunities. I look forward to seeing what we will be able to achieve in 2018.

Polly Sierer has been mayor of Newark since 2013 and writes a monthly Mayor's Corner column. Contact her at psierer@comcast.net.

Out of the Attic

Original Newark Post printing shop

This week's Out of the Attic item is a photo of the original Newark Post printing shop, where the first edition of this newspaper was written exactly 108 years ago on Jan. 26, 1910.

The building, located at the southeast corner of Main Street and Depot Road (now South College Avenue), was originally the Delaware House hotel in the mid 1800s and then served as a livery stable, furniture store and other businesses.

Newark Post founder Everett C. Johnson took over the building in 1910. The paper was originally printed at the Cecil Whig in Elkton, but Johnson quickly expanded the building to include a print shop.

In 1915, Johnson sold the property to Delaware College (now the University of Delaware) and moved his newspaper and publishing company to the corner of Depot Road and West Park Place, which became known as the Press of Kells.

The college demolished the old building in 1925, and in its place today is a volleyball court behind the Brown Hall dormitory. The old building is not totally gone, however – bricks from the structure were used to build the wall at the Main Street end of the UD Green.

(Source: "Press, Politics and Perseverance: Everett Johnson and the Press of Kells" by Robert C. Barnes and Judith M. Pfeiffer.)

Out of the Attic is produced in partnership with the Newark Historical Society. The Newark History Museum, located in the old train station under the South College Avenue bridge is open by appointment December through March. Admission is free. ROCK that those who share their passion are growing fewer and there is nothing in Delaware to preserve those memories.

From

So the Newark couple set out to do something about it.

About three years ago, the couple started a Delaware Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame page on Facebook, at first simply looking to share their memories and solicit more info from other like-minded Delawareans. While their expectations were minimal, they were pleasantly surprised to find they weren't alone in recalling those younger days.

"We recognized from the responses that everyone has these kinds of wonderful memories. It just took off," Paula said, noting nearly 900 people now follow the page and contribute to the conversation. "It's been a burgeoning place since we started it with people sharing memories, photos and recordings. We aim to keep the faith with the music, faces and memories."

Through their connections, the Wolkind met Steve Leech, a local historian with experience in technology, who helped them launch a website for their idea. He provided a meticulous history of music in Delaware and its notable connections.

"When we met Steve, we knew we had our third," she said. "When you talk to Steve it's like reading the textbook on Delaware music."

As their enthusiasm grew for their pet project, there was just one glaring problem to moving it to its next step:

they were living more than 1,400 miles away from the state they wanted to honor.

Nearly 25 years ago, the Wolkind moved to Colorado for work. While they enjoyed the natural beauty of their adopted state, it wasn't home and dreams of establishing a physical hall of fame meant that they were faced with a choice.

"We packed up and moved back to Delaware in order to pursue our dream," Paula said.

She is often asked by people as to why she would return to Delaware from Colorado, and Paula's response was always the same.

"In Colorado, there's no Bing's Bakery and you can't dance to the Larry Tucker Band," she said. "Now I can do those things."

The Wolkind's long-term goal is to secure a building that would double as a museum where the legacy of Delaware musicians could be retained and a school where up-and-coming musicians could learn from older musicians. While they have connections to Newark, Paula said the organizers are open to locating the Hall of Fame to anywhere in state that makes sense.

Among the bands and artists that may get honored in the near future are Teddy and the Continentals, a Wilmington-based doo-wop band of the '50s; the Sin City Band, a country-rock band that still plays weekly at Argilla Brewing Company in Newark; the Watson Brothers Band, a popular blues rock band; Richie Immediato and the Hurricanes, a '50s band; and Rocket 88 with Mark Kenneally, a '70s blues rock band, and more, according to Paula.

"So much of what happens in Delaware doesn't get featured in some way," she said.

Delaware Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame organizer George Wolkind was a member of the '70s blues rock group Snakegrinder and the Shredded Field Mice.

"There's just such an incredible amount of bands."

While the Wolkind have an institutional knowledge about local rock 'n' roll history from the '50s, '60s and '70s, Paula said they want to recognize the varied musical history in the First State, noting southern Delaware features a large blues and bluegrass community, while Wilmington has a storied connection to jazz through musicians like Robert "Boysie" Lowery and Clifford Brown.

"Although popular music that commonly gets called rock 'n' roll is near and dear to our hearts, we want to honor other genres as well," she said. "They often helped influence the sound of others."

Nods will also likely be given to musicians like George Thorogood and Bob Marley and bands like Television that have connections to Delaware, but made big impacts on America's music scene.

"Everyone has their favorite local musician, but we also celebrate those who have left Delaware to make a bigger impact on music," Paula said.

If the Wolkind were looking for a measure of the excitement for their idea, they only had to look at the interest in tickets to their inaugural fundraiser: all 300 tickets were taken in two and half days. That event, set for Saturday afternoon at the Newark Country Club, will raise funds through donations and silent auctions.

What helped interest, however, was the fact that they were able to secure a performance by Mark Farner, the former lead singer for the chart-topping

'70s band Grand Funk Railroad, courtesy of Fred Dawson, from the Newark band Club Phred, which will also perform Saturday and back Farner in his performance.

"Fred has a connection to Mark Farner and he said to us, 'You know, what you guys need is a headliner,' and he made the call," she said. "We're enormously grateful to Fred and Mark, and everyone who came to help us get this event off the ground."

For those who were unable to get a ticket to Saturday's fundraiser, Paula said they are planning a guest bartender night at the Deer Park Tavern in March. Those who would like to help in the organization or fundraising for the hall of fame can email delrockandroll@gmail.com

While the national Rock & Roll Hall of Fame typically inducts a handful of acts each year, Paula said Delaware organizers hope to induct their first class of maybe 10 to 15 acts into their hall of fame in late April.

"A lot of this community is getting older, and we want them to be able to play," she explained. "And enjoy knowing that their legacy will have a place."

Editor's note: Volunteers at the Pencader Heritage Museum have been digitizing old Newark City Council meeting minutes. They share excerpts with Newark Post readers in a weekly column.

April-June 1939: Council agreed to pay half the cost of installing newly required septic tanks on Annabelle Street because sewers were not available. Gas stations and vehicle repair shops were prohibited, except on Main Street between the Pomeroy and B&O Railroads, with current businesses off Main Street grandfathered in.

The Memorial Day program committee was given $100. City offices were closed on Good Friday. Messrs. Johnson, Ramsey and Ferguson were re-elected to council.

The Wilson sisters agreed to turn over Dallam and Old Oak Roads, built through their property, to the town and would be reimbursed $1.94 per linear foot for the sewer they had installed. The town engineer's plan for draining surface water from the Smith and Holton properties was approved. Bids were sought for curbing and storm sewers in newly developed areas west of town limits.

The town was looking for off-street parking sites and space behind the Main Street school building (now part of Barnes and Noble Bookstore) was considered and later became a town parking lot. The garbage collection contract was for $950/year. The tax rate was .40 per $100 valuation. The annual contribution to Aetna Hose Hook and Ladder Co. was raised to $1,500.

Town employee J. Clark had run up a large water bill at his rental property while using it for a boarding house, and the landlord asked council to ensure that he paid it. Council agreed.

Council agreed to reimburse the University of Delaware for water and electricity when town children used UD's pool in summer. One property tax bill was appealed and refused.
