Main Street arrests rise after start of new unit

by Kean Burenga
Assistant News Editor

A sharp increase in arrests over the weekend suggests the eight-man tactical unit which began patrolling Main Street last Thursday is already making an impact, according to Police Chief William Hogan.

Almost all the arrests involved university students, police said, dispelling the theory that 'locals' and teens from nearby towns are the source of the problems on Main Street.

Hogan said that in the first three days of the program, the special task force arrested eight people for alcohol-related offenses, six for disorderly conduct and one for drug possession.

Violations ranged from underage drinking and public urination to boisterous behavior.

"These are arrests we probably wouldn't have gotten before," Hogan said.

Stuart Sharkey, vice president for student affairs, said he was surprised so many of the problems were student-related.

If evidence indicates students are creating problems on Main Street, Sharkey said, it is the university's duty to "educate students of their responsibilities."

"The issue is one that clearly needs to be brought up," said Dr. Timothy Brooks, dean of students.

Hogan said police also issued 21 citations for cruising, nearly three times the usual rate of violations issued between Thursday and Saturday.

Criminal justice professor Dr. Carl Klockars said studies done in Newark, N.J. and Flint, Mich. suggest that increased levels of foot patrols are effective in keeping social order, but ineffective in reducing violent crimes.

But according to Hogan, Newark does not have as great a problem with "serious violence" as it does with "threatening behavior."

Young adults, combined with alcohol, are the source of the problems, Hogan stated.

"This mix causes offensive behavior," he added. "When this [behavior] becomes illegal,

State gives recognition to handicapped workers

Four hundred fifty people — some walking, some rolling, some leaning on canes or crutches — gathered at Clayton Hall Wednesday to recognize and celebrate the state's outstanding handicapped employees and their employers.

The Governor's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped (GCEH) Awards and Training Program was an all-day event. The program combined educational seminars about the handicapped with an awards ceremony including speakers Gov. Michael Castle and Secretary of State Labor Mathias Fallas.

Diane Treacy, executive director of GCEH, said companies and their employees come from all over Delaware once a year for the event.

AIDS policy may include condom sale

The dispensing of condoms throughout campus, as a possible response to the growing concern over Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, was considered at the President's Council meeting Wednesday.

Condom distribution from vending machines in dormitories, the Student Center main desk and Student Health Services were some suggestions raised at the meeting.

The university is devising a comprehensive program to educate students and employees to make them more conscious about the dangers of AIDS, according to Stuart Sharkey, vice president for student affairs.

"We need to be doing something and we need to be doing it vigorously," Sharkey commented.

According to President Russel C. Jones, the issue is "to raise awareness to get students to take their lives into their own hands."

Although AIDS is usually associated with large urban areas, "the virus is in this area," according to Anne Lomax, program coordinator for Wellspring.

At least 60 cases of the AIDS syndrome have originated from within the state of Delaware, Lomax said. Another 40 cases have been transmitted into Delaware from neighboring states.

"Many more people carry the virus," said Lomax. A person can carry the virus without having any symptoms for up to 10 years, she explained.

Sharkey, referring to warnings from the U.S. Surgeon General, said abstinence from sex is the best defense against AIDS, but using a condom is the next best form of protection.

Rick Crossland, president of the Delaware Undergraduate Student Council, said sex on campus is "not something that is going to be avoided. It's go-

Student injured in cycle crash

A university sophomore, Daniel McGovern, was injured Wednesday night when his motorcycle collided with a car on Elkton Road near Friendly Ice Cream Shop around 8:30 p.m., Newark Police said.

No one was seriously injured in the accident, police said.

McGovern, who was in stable condition Thursday afternoon, was rushed by helicopter to Christiana Hospital shortly after 9 p.m., according to an Aetna Hose, Hook & Ladder Co. official. He broke his left leg and two ribs, a hospital spokeswoman said.

The driver and passenger of the car were not injured, police said. Jennifer Koepf, a university junior, was the passenger.

McGovern, who was travelling northbound on Elkton Road, crashed into the driver's side of the car as it exited the restaurant's parking lot, police said.

McGovern was thrown over the car upon impact, police said.

Police said that no alcohol was involved and that McGovern was wearing a helmet.

Police have taken impact measurements to determine the speed and cause of the crash. The accident is still under investigation.

News Analysis

NFL strike could prove costly for both sides

by Karen Ascrizzi

Student Affairs Editor

The first National Football League replacement games were televised last weekend as the NFL strike reached the two-week mark. This weekend makes it three.

No one can predict how long the strike will last. Matters of salaries and pensions are involved, but the major issue appears to be free agency.

Unlike the major league baseball teams, the 28 NFL teams reserve the rights of first refusal on the services of any player with an expired contract.

The players stepped out of their unlimited free agency boundaries. They proposed freedom of movement after four years in the league, contending that a pro football player's life expectancy is less than four seasons. They want all four-year men to be freed by compensation clauses.

According to the owners, free agency would destroy a prosperous system, so they rejected the union's proposal.

What the owners did offer was a reduction in what one team must compensate another team during draft picks for free agent signing. The players declined.

However, over 100 striking players crossed the picket lines before last weekend, rejoining their teams made up of newly hired players. Many of these returning players were injured anyway and did not play.

But the degradation of the NFL's image has affected more than just the players and their owners.

While more than 90 percent of NFL union members picketed, several major advertisers withdrew their support during last week's replacement games. The canceled games cost owners almost $30 million in refunded broadcasting rights each week.

Network sales will lose $4 million or more per game. Major advertisers such as United Airlines, Miller Brewing Co. and Blue Cross/Blue Shield have defected. The only major NFL buyer to continue sponsorship is Anheuser-Busch Cos., the biggest advertiser in professional sports.

To recompense for these losses, the three major networks have attempted to market campaigns around the NFL. The only problem is that airtime in comparable programming remains limited.

So the strike goes on. And as teams filled their rosters with whatever players they stumbled upon, more than a third of the tickets sold for the replacement games last weekend were refunded.

No one wanted to watch pseudo-players depreciate their favorite team. These understudies are receiving $3,500 or $5,000 per game. And anyone can "try out."

Network executives predict that poor performances by replacement teams could break their contract with the NFL. If push comes to shove, low viewership means alternate programming until the strike is resolved. No more football.

Right now? Both management and the union hope negative feedback and the economic losses prompt some type of impasse.

They could finish the season without a contract and hope to beat the system. But they will not consider playing minus contract or pursuing league action, which is a method recently adopted by the National Basketball Association's players.

Their reasoning — time. It takes two or three years to plough through the red tape, and there are no guaranteed benefits or severance.

The average NFL salary is $230,000, which is $140,000 more than players received in 1982. The players are risking a lot — especially financially.

Help wanted: Nanny needed for Jones family

by E.W. Hopkins

Staff Reporter

One recent addition to Russel C. Jones' house on Kent Way has been getting more than she bargained for.

Mary Keillor, Russel C. Jones' mother-in-law, has been on active duty for the past month at the Jones' residence — as governess. She will do the job until a suitable applicant can be found, interviewed and hired by the university, according to President Jones.

"We have had a live-in governess for the past 10 years," asserted Jones. "ever since we had our first child."

He explained that 80-hour work weeks are the norm for him, while his wife Sharon's managerial position at the New Castle branch of Digital Corp. commonly takes over 40 hours a week. So the Joneses are left with little precious time to administer the daily needs of their two girls, Kim, 11, and Tammie, 8.

The university's personnel department is currently searching for a suitable permanent governess, but personnel officials refused to comment on the search. Tuesday was the deadline for applications.

Keillor refused to comment on her duties. She referred all calls to the president, who also refused to comment on the lack of a permanent nanny.

For approximately two months, job number 87, governess to the university president, has been listed first of 18 available salaried staff positions on the university jobs hotline. The position pays $12,500 a year.

Candidates for "live-in nanny to the president's children" must have at least an associate's degree in child development — a bachelor's degree is preferred.

The duties of the governess include organizing and reviewing children's social and school activities, providing transportation to activities and advising the parents of concerns, according to the jobs hotline.

An "ability to exercise independent judgement" and a driver's license are the final requirements, though Jones added cooking, cleaning and general housework to this list.

Jones declined to comment on the $12,250 yearly salary that the new governess will receive. It is not known whether Keillor is getting paid for her temporary help.

Jones explained that the governess is the "glue that holds the house together. She is essential when both the mother and father work." He said that the most important matters of child rearing such as homework and disciplining are performed by him and his wife.

"The primary role of the governess is to do all the things we would do if we were around," Jones added.

Jones is confident that the right person will be found, and says that the interim services performed by Grandma Keillor have been excellent.

He explained, "Family life is different now than it was 20 years ago. . . we need a support mechanism to hold it all together."

Keillor will be returning to her native Canada, once a replacement is found, for a well-earned vacation.

Rabid raccoons encroaching city borders

by Lisa Moorhead

Copy Editor

An alarming number of raccoons carrying the deadly rabies virus have attacked animals and reportedly charged people without provocation in areas neighboring Newark and northern New Castle County, according to public health officials.

Although no rabies cases have been reported in Delaware, an outbreak of rabid raccoons in nearby Chester County, Pa., and Cecil County, Md., prompted state officials last week to alert residents of the growing problem.

Chester County, which borders northern New Castle County, has confirmed seven cases of rabid raccoons, one bat and one dog, according to Dr. Harold Russell, an epidemiologist there.

An estimated 60 to 65 people, who were exposed to the fatal virus through contact with the rabid animals, have been successfully treated so far, he said.

The dog, a French poodle, contracted the disease on a farm which spans adjacent towns Kennett Square, Pa. and Yorklyn, Del.

A rabid raccoon attacked the poodle without provocation, Russell said. The dog killed the raccoon, but was also bitten, he added.

"The raccoon could just have likely been found in the Delaware section, but it was found on the Pa. side," Russell said. Health officials are still unsure which side the raccoon came from.

Delaware state epidemiologist Paul Silverman said no rabies cases in animals or humans have been reported in the state. However, he expressed concern over the increasing likelihood that Delaware will soon be affected.

"Regardless of where [the raccoon] was found, the issue is that [the virus] is coming close to the Delaware border — it may already be here."

According to Russell, the problem has been building over the last five or six years as the rabies virus spreads among wild animals. Officials expected the rabies outbreak to affect the Cecil County area earlier than it has, he added.

"We thought it would hit [Cecil County] this summer, but they got it this fall," Russell said. The county has confirmed rabies cases in 68 raccoons and two foxes, he said. No cases in humans have been reported in Cecil County.

The rabid raccoon problem started in Virginia and West Virginia in 1981, and is spreading to the north and east, according to Charles Smyser, county health official.

Smyser said that while any mammal can contract the disease, raccoons, foxes, skunks and meat-eating animals are the most common carriers of the virus.

Speaker: Apartheid leaders will be tried

by Laura Schmit

Staff Reporter

When blacks liberate South Africa, white leaders will be put on trial for murder, said Dr. Ravel Pinto in her speech "What is South Africa to Me: Apartheid and African Americans" Tuesday in Kirkbride.

These leaders who have brutalized and mass murdered South African blacks should not be allowed to walk around unpunished, added Pinto, who is teaching part time at the university.

Pinto, a professor of African-American studies at Temple University, left South Africa 20 years ago on an exit permit, which allowed her to leave her native country but not to return.

An Afrikaner minority (African native of European descent) of 4.5 million whites, she said, currently imposes their government on 30 million blacks.

"The ideologies that the government uses are the same as the ones that Hitler used," Pinto stated.

Treatment of black South Africans is comparable to Nazi treatment of the Jews, she said. Afrikaners support white supremacy through repressive and violent treatment of the blacks, Pinto explained.

Although the nation was officially allied with the British in World War II, the Afrikaners openly sided with Hitler, she stated.

South African blacks have been rebelling against white rulers since 1652 when the Dutch arrived, Pinto stressed.

"In the 100 years following, there were nine major wars against the invasion of South African land," she added.

In 1910 when the British conquered South Africa, Pinto explained, they instituted a government run by the white minority and set up laws separating the blacks from the whites.

"It was the beginning of the real apartheid state," she said.

During the 1960s, the repression of blacks in South Africa and the simultaneous civil rights movement in the United States had a direct effect on one another, Pinto stated.

While South Africans were being denied freedoms, the blacks who were fighting for rights in the United States became their heroes, she added.

"Since 1954 there has been a very active anti-apartheid movement in this country," Pinto said, which was initiated by Afro-Americans.

ing to happen."

"Most sex is Friday and Saturday night, when condoms are not available" because drug stores are closed, explained Mike Cradler, president of the Resident Student Association.

Both Crossland and Cradler agreed that the availability of condoms on campus is important in reducing the risks of AIDS to university students.

Lomax explained that the only safe sexual relationships are those which have been monogamous since 1977.

Based on the number of unwanted pregnancies and other sexually transmitted diseases at the university, Sharkey said, "Students are not having safe sex."

Sharkey added, "We need to make condoms more available to students who desire them."

Because the incubation of the AIDS virus can take anywhere from five to 10 years, Sharkey said. "We don't know what is coming three years down the road."

If a freshman gets the virus, he continued, he or she might not find out about it until after they are a few years out of school.

Dr. James R. Soles, a political science professor, said, "If there is anything we can do to protect young people's lives, we should do it."

...state gives awards to handicapped

which is held during Employment of the Handicapped Week (Oct. 4-Oct. 12).

Karen Humphreys, Treacy's secretary, added that the employees are honored for above-average participation in their jobs.

"These people give that little extra effort," said Humphreys. "They're giving outstanding job performance — regardless of being handicapped."

The highlight of the ceremony was the presentation of awards to the employees; some having difficulty getting to the stage, and one straining as he gave his acceptance speech in sign language.

The Employee of the Year Award, selected from 23 nominees, went to John Marsh, a 1983 university graduate who works for Maryland Bank.

Marsh, who suffers from a rare disease that impairs nerve induction, said he was honored to be recognized and hopes similar events create more opportunity for the handicapped.

"When I was first out of college it was really hard to find a job," said Marsh, who walks with the aid of two canes.

"Employers would tell me it was a managerial job, but when they would see me they'd say I also had to unload a truck," continued Marsh.

"When you've got a pair of crazy legs, it's kind of hard to load a truck."

In a short speech by Gov. Castle, he said he thought Delaware had a great awareness of the handicapped.

"I don't think there's anything that is as heartwarming as seeing these awards presented," Castle said. "I hope next year will bring bigger improvements."

Marsh shared the govern-nor's optimism. "There's more work that needs to be done," Marsh said, "but I gotta say, the future's so bright — I gotta wear shades."

Other award-winning employees were Ringgold Raul Saunders from New Castle County, Erskia Groomes from Kent County, and Burton McGrath from Sussex County.

Delaware employers, selected from a group of 19 nominees, were awarded for their willingness to employ the handicapped. They were the Delaware Charter Guarantee and Trust Company in New Castle County, Rose's Department Store in Kent County, and Perdue, Inc. from Sussex County.

The Employer-of-the-Year Award went to Draper King Cole, Inc., a cannery company, which was cited for providing transportation and housing for their employees.

Gov. Castle tells state: 'Get the drift and bag it'

by Michelle Wall

Assistant News Editor

Over 350 people have pledged their support to Delaware's first coastal clean-up campaign tomorrow from 9 a.m. to noon, according to coordinator Donna L. Stachecki.

"Get the Drift and Bag It" will rely on these volunteers to rid man-made trash from Delaware's 24 miles of ocean front and 35 miles of bay and river shoreline.

"People from all over the state have called in to adopt a stretch of beach," Stachecki said. "Individuals, families, classes, organizations, even legislators have shown an interest."

Rep. Tom Carper is planning to pick up trash at Cape Henlopen State Park, according to a member of Carper's team.

"Not only will the Congressman be speaking at the kick-off ceremony beforehand," he said, "but he will also be actively participating."

On the Delaware Bay, state Rep. George V. Carey and state Sen. Ruth Ann Minner will be contributing their time on their district beaches, Stachecki added.

"At 8:45 a.m. we will have a few words from Carper, Carey, and myself at Henlopen State Park," she said, "and then we will lead the groups to the man-made debris."

The "man-made debris" consists mostly of cups, bottles, tires, fishing nets, and other discarded items made of plastic that is not biodegradable.

"Six-pack holders and Styrofoam cups are regularly mistaken for food," she said, "and thousands of animals are killed each year."

Plastic pollution is considered the greatest threat posed to marine birds and mammals, according to a recent Office of Technology Assessment Report.

The plastic will be dumped at a trash compactor at Delaware Seashore State Park, Stachecki explained.

"The trash collection and disposal will be simplified with the donation of 2,000 Hefty trash bags by Mobile Oil Corp."

If students are interested, they can pick up bags and data cards at the Rusty Rudder at the Crabbers Cove Deck of Dewey Beach, Stachecki urged, "or they can use their own bags and meet us at any of the locations."

The data cards are simply

"short questionnaires aimed at keeping track of what is picked up and where," she said. "The cards are a way of keeping record of the efforts of so many concerned Delawareans."

The increased interest of residents has been shown by the success of last week's Coast Day and the numerous amount of volunteers scheduled to help clean tomorrow, according to a spokesperson from Gov. Michael N. Castle's office.

These two state events fall during what Castle has proclaimed as "Coastweek 1987."

Coastweek recognizes Delaware's commitment to "the wise management of the coastline to ensure for all the residents that the environmental and economic value of the coastal zone will be sustained."

The rain date for "Get the Drift and Bag It" is Saturday, Oct. 17.

Interested students and residents should call 736-4506 to speak with Donna Stachecki who says we should then "head for the beach to help a good cause."

Jones urges faculty input on Project Vision

by Jenny Tobriner and Michael Dunleavy
Staff Reporters

President Russel C. Jones extended a formal invitation Oct. 2 in the form of a memo, asking his colleagues to "wed idealism and realism" as they "engage in Project Vision."

During the "planning of program development" phase scheduled to take place in the 1987-88 academic year, Jones requested that "individual units articulate their mission and then determine what they would do under circumstances of growth, steady state and decline."

According to Dr. Jerry

Beasley, chairman of the English department, "If growth continues in the [English] major, it cannot be a steady state."

He explained that there are presently 60 faculty members and over 600 majors, creating a need for an increase in faculty.

Other areas that Beasley plans to review through Project Vision include additional support at the graduate level through fellowships and scholarships and an increase in the quality of intellectual life for majors.

This "resource allocation" process will be over by June 1988. According to Jones, he will then begin to set up mechanisms for generating resources.

"The first year of the two-year planning process," explained Jones in the memo, "belongs to [faculty]." Jones encouraged his colleagues to develop their own plans, goals, and visions.

In addition, Jones has developed his own set of goals, including an increase in graduate programming and research, accelerated work on educational delivery systems enhanced by new technologies, and expanding "as an institution to reach out into the entire state of Delaware."

The engineering department has already begun formulating plans to "deliver education beyond the campus," according to Dr. Byron Pipes, dean of engineering.

Crediting Jones with implementation of the soon-to-be-constructed, video-equipped classrooms, Pipes said the university could benefit financially through the marketing of taped engineering classes.

He explained, "There's money there."

Pipes predicted that video-equipped classrooms will go beyond the engineering department, into the arts and humanities with the progression of Project Vision.

Pipes added, "The president is looking at the university and questioning everything. It's exciting. It's a chance for [faculty] and students to change and improve things."

we intend to take action."

"This mix causes offensive behavior," he added. "When this [behavior] becomes illegal, we intend to take action."

Using a pin map, police track citizen complaints and use their own observations to help identify problem areas and formulate strategies to eliminate them, Hogan explained.

"Right now we are concentrating on hot spots," he continued. "When we displace the hot spots, we will move all through Main Street."

Different mixes of motor and foot patrols and combinations of uniformed and plainclothes police make the new task force "very flexible," according to Hogan.

Surveillance is carried out by plainclothes police, he explained, while uniformed patrols are used for checking "bogus" I.D. cards or when a strong police presence is needed.

Police officers said dressing in plainclothes is advantageous in dealing with Main Street problems.

"When I have my uniform on, it has a halo effect," said one undercover officer. "When I walk down the street everyone is an angel."

While patrolling Tuesday night, the undercover officers said, they spotted a man drinking beer openly on the street. As they confronted and arrested the man, another man pulled up on a motorcycle, walked behind a bush and urinated on a wall in front of the officers. Police then arrested him for disorderly conduct.

The Main Street tactical unit has yielded a higher number of arrests since Thursday night.

Vol. 113 No. 41 Student Center, University of Delaware Newark, DE 19716 Fri., Oct. 9, 1987

Condom Sense

AIDS or no AIDS, students at the University of Delaware are going to engage in sex.

It's a fact that seems obvious to most, but it's been a truth hard to swallow for some members of the administration.

Because only now — years after the AIDS virus began reaping its grim harvest — has the university begun to formulate a radical awareness plan to educate the community.

Although only in the discussion stages, student leaders and administrators are calling on the university to develop a comprehensive plan to combat the deadly disease.

In addition to increased AIDS awareness and education, some have argued that the plan should include increased availability of condoms on campus.

Considering the seriousness of the disease and the success of last semester's condom give-away, the university should provide condoms in residence halls and vending machines.

If the university truly wants students to protect themselves if they choose to have sex, then administrators should provide both the ways and the means for students to engage in "safe sex."

Providing condoms to students who need them is in no way a "stamp of approval" for promiscuity, but only an act of genuine concern for the health and well-being of all students.

Such a move is bound to stir controversy — as it did at the University of Pennsylvania earlier in the year — but the stakes are too high. We need an AIDS plan that will include student input, and we need one now — not in two or three years.

Let's face it, a "just say no approach" to sex is naive and ineffective. These are desperate times that call for drastic measures.

Hogan's Heroes

A "job well done" is in order for Police Chief William Hogan and his Main Street task force. The patrol made over 15 arrests over the weekend — with almost all of them being university students, not Newark "townies."

It's time university students stopped pointing the finger at everybody else for the problems on Main Street and started cleaning up their own act.

Fear of Fear

We all live in a house on fire, no fire department to call; no way out, just the upstairs window to look out of while the fire burns the house down with us trapped, locked in it. — Tennessee Williams

It is 4 a.m. and the room is filled with an opaque darkness.

The only noises I can hear are the steady droning of crickets and my heart pounding. My body is rigid with fear. I listen intensely for the sound of footsteps.

I wonder if he can hear my sharp draw of breath. Should I lie quietly, feigning sleep or should I scream madly for help? The feeling of powerlessness and frustration overwhelms me and then subsides.

The footsteps were imagined, but the fear was real. This paranoia of mine increases every time I read about another rape or attempted rape. It is not rape itself that is to be dreaded, but the fear of rape. I am not alone in my fear.

By nature of our gender, women are more vulnerable to crimes of sexual assault.

In 1986, over 90,000 rapes were reported nationwide, according to the Uniform Crime Report. In Newark alone, there were nine rapes and attempted rapes reported from January 1987 to September 1987, according to the Newark Police. And these are only the reported rapes. Often times rape goes unreported due to the victim's reticence and lack of faith in the system.

Staggering statistics yes, but it is not the volume of incidents but the uncertainty about rape which unnerves me. I am never free from the fear of rape.

Realizing that the self-defense course I took may prove to be a lesson in futility. Knowing that all the precautions I take, still, do not make me impervious to such a horrible violation.

I despise how imprisoned and vulnerable I am because of this atrocious crime. I take a risk every time I park my car and walk to my apartment after dark. I run from the parking lot to my door, constantly looking over my shoulder.

Even once I get inside, I am not relieved, there could be someone there, waiting.

Maybe I am extremely paranoid, but every reported rape, attempted rape and report of indecent exposure (of which there are several a week) validates my feelings.

The fear of rape permeates not just my life, but many women's. The act of rape does not violate just a woman's body but her mind as well. Any other crime is almost palatable compared to rape.

The feeling of powerlessness is always present, it never leaves. I am outraged by my vulnerability because I am a female. It seems unjust. I would like to blame something, someone or some institution.

Is it society that says men are to be aggressive and women passive? Or is the criminal justice system which is lacking?

According to an official from the state attorney general's office, there was an 81 percent conviction rate for the 227 cases of sexual offenses indicted in 1986 for New Castle County.

However, many of these offenders are eligible for parole only a few years later. There is no viable and immediate solution. I realize that, but I probably will always wake up to the sound of a branch against my window.

You can rob my house, steal my car, or even take my life — none compare to a raped soul.

Excellence in majors besides engineering

To the editor:

Cheers to Steven Flynn for showing such unlimited ignorance and pomposity.

I highly doubt that The Review staff is biased against engineering. They're probably just like the rest of us — sick of engineering majors who strut around campus with the strange notion that they're the "cream of the crop."

Yes, Mr. Flynn, other departments have very bright students who are doing interesting research, fascinating projects and highly original artwork. I think its time you took your goggles off and did your homework.

In the psychology department alone, students have done original research on eating disorders, facial expressions and the perception of men and women. We just don't advertise it as you do.

As for your ideas about the Blue Hen sculpture and the profitability of art research, your arguments are irrelevant.

The Blue Hen does not represent the diversity of artwork in the world today, and the profitability of art research is just as open for argument as the profitability of engineering research.

In a technological society such as ours, funds are disproportionately given to technical concerns. This is an embarrassing state of affairs for everyone, and if I were you I wouldn't shout about it too much.

If you even vaguely think that the amount of funding represents the worth of a department, I think its time you opened your eyes.

Stop living in engineering land because the rest of the "quality" students at the University of Delaware are getting sick of such ignorance.

Deer Park Tavern overstepped its bounds

To the editor:

The University of Delaware is home for 15,000 students. And here, like every other college campus, drinking is a part of college life — an outlet for anxiety, pressures, and most of all, fun.

But how would you like to walk into a bar and be hassled over your identification, be served by rude waitresses, or sometimes not even be served at all.

All of these things have happened to me and my friends at the Deer Park Tavern.

While at the Deer Park one Sunday morning, two of my friends ordered alcoholic beverages and were carded. The hostess kept their licenses for almost half and hour and refused to return them when asked. During this time, the manager called the police, apparently to check the licences of my friends.

We were shocked because both of my friends are of legal drinking age. Furthermore, one friend was a frequent patron of the tavern.

On another occasion at the Deer Park, myself and two friends were refused service because one friend was boisterous when getting the attention of the waitress. She may have had justification on one hand, but why was I refused a drink when I was completely sober?

Has the Deer Park overstepped their bounds? Why are they treating their customers like criminals?

And is mistreatment and disrespect for customers the proper way to run a business?

Higher pay needed for security monitors

To the editor:

It is my understanding that there is a shortage of security monitors in the university. This problem seems as though it's been developing for a couple of years.

Students no longer want to give up a night of partying to stay home only to earn minimum wage.

I live in Lane Hall and was called out of desperation by the Russell A/B Hall Director to monitor. She said she had asked around to all the other Russells and even Thompson for a monitor.

I understand the need for security monitors, so I decided I'd pitch in and help.

Security monitors are necessary to assist the university in maintaining the students' safety and protection on weekends.

If the university doesn't want to consider increasing the wages for monitors — like they did to solve the shortage of employees in the dining halls — then maybe they should ponder what they would do without us.

Comfortably Numb

When my sister and I were younger, I used to get a lot of satisfaction out of making her look dumb.

It wasn't very hard, actually. She lived her life through soap operas and prime-time TV. Any time I mentioned a current event, her eyes got glassy and her jaw gaped open as she gazed at me in befuddled ignorance.

It was good for a lot of laughs.

I mean, you had to laugh at someone who knew more about what was happening in Port Charles than in places like Beirut, Chernobyl or the Persian Gulf.

It's a good thing I've outgrown my little game, or I'd be having a field day on this campus. I would probably make it to class even less than I already do (a theory many of my professors may wish to dispute).

According to my observations, this place is crawling with people who never get any closer to current issues than the "Top Ten" lists on "Late Night with David Letterman."

Marge Schellhardt I was never really aware of the ignorance running rampant at this university until members of The Review staff administered a poll regarding Sen. Joseph Biden's decision to withdraw his candidacy for the presidency a couple of weeks ago.

A significant number of the students questioned were unable to reply because they didn't know what the reporter was talking about.

I have a sinking feeling I know why many of the 23 percent who were undecided couldn't decide — they didn't know either.

I realize that, as a native Delawarean, I have probably been aware of Biden's identity and political record much longer than many university students.

But come on now, the man was a Democratic front-runner in the 1988 presidential race.

I'm afraid that makes him one of those people students need to know about.

Students seem to be just as oblivious of what is happening on campus as they are of events in the world at large.

Earlier this week, a Review reporter outside the Perkins Student Center posed the question, "Do you think Project Vision will make a difference at the university?"

No less than half the students queried responded, "What project?"

Yes, Matt Kelly is, in reality, only one of many students who exist in some other dimension which has not yet felt the influence of Russel C. Jones.

The average university student has many demands placed upon his or her time, and I know very few of us have the time to become experts in matters of national policy and foreign affairs.

However, it does not take that much time to develop a working knowledge of the news events that are shaping the world we live in.

Everyone has at least half an hour to kill each day. It doesn't take more than that to skim the newspaper or watch the news (all of it, not just the sports and weather).

Among students, increased knowledge could have significant ramifications.

I believe that if students were more aware of the details of today's issues, they would also be more likely to form definite opinions about them, and maybe even become active advocates of those opinions.

As things stand now, the vicious cycle of apathy and ignorance continues with too few exceptions.

At the risk of coining a highly over-used phrase, our generation will supply the leaders of tomorrow.

Personally, I'm not too thrilled by most of what we have to offer.

A society lead by uninformed people is not the stuff from which dreams are made unless, of course, they're nightmares.

DUSC schedules inauguration symposium

by Sandra Wakemen
Staff Reporter

The Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress is sponsoring an inauguration symposium for President Russel C. Jones later this month, DUSC President Rick Crossland announced Monday.

Crossland said he hopes the all-day affair Oct. 23 will "get the students involved in the inauguration."

"President Jones has been very helpful with DUSC so far," Crossland said. "We [students] can show a lot of support for his inauguration."

The symposium, titled "Preparing for the 21st Century," will feature six panel discussions dealing with humanities, leadership, business, engineering and technology, government and international relations and careers in the 21st century.

It will be "a lot of fun and very informative," Crossland said.

Later in the meeting, Dr. Timothy Brooks discussed his role as dean of students in his address to DUSC.

"One thing I handle is crisis management," Brooks said.

This can be anything from a student becoming "extremely intoxicated and ending up in critical condition in a local hospital," Brooks explained, "to a phone call I got from another [student involved] in a head-on collision in New Jersey."

Brooks added that he deals with an average of five or six fatalities per year.

Timothy Brooks

"This seems like an awful lot," he said.

Brooks said he is also concerned with the delegation of funds to student interest projects.

"We don't have enough housing for sororities or fraternities," he said. "[My office] is trying to get our new president to think positively in that direction and build more facilities for Greeks on campus."

According to Brooks, there are more handicapped students on campus which "has meant some real changes for the University."

"We're putting $92,000 into door openers on Smith Hall, Evans Hall and Conover Apartments," he said.

Brooks finally described himself as "complaint central."

If a student has a complaint and doesn't know where to go, Brooks explained, "undoubtedly [he or she] will find my office."

Brooks said his office deals with problems ranging from sexual harassment, to grade complaints, to complaints about buildings.

"The other thing I feel I am, and sometimes it's hard to prove it, is an advocate for students," Brooks said.

Whenever students want backing on a major issue on campus, Brooks explained, they can come to him.

"I'll be happy to back [the students] up if I believe in what they want," he stated.

Also, DUSC delegated funds to six university clubs and associations.

Video yearbook captures '87-'88 on film

by Kevin Bixby
Staff Reporter

A video yearbook chronicling university events will be available to students for the first time ever, according to Mike Ranauto (BE 89), president of Delta Tau Delta, the sponsoring fraternity.

"The video will bring to life the events covered in a [conventional] yearbook," said Paul Luongo, president of P.

L. Productions and a university alumnus.

"The Best Years of Your Life" can currently be reserved for $10 at a stand in the Student Center, Ranauto said. The total cost is $29, with the balance payable at the time of delivery in mid-May.

The video, according to Luongo, will be available in VHS format only and will have a playing time of 60 to 90 minutes.

The yearbook will be a professional project, he stressed, carried out by a trained production crew.

Everything from classroom activities to the athletic field will be covered by the new concept, he said.

In all, over 100 events will be recorded chronologically on the video, according to Luongo. Most of the events covered will be the same as those found in a traditional yearbook.

"The video yearbook concept has been very successful throughout the nation," Luongo said.

According to Ranauto, initial sales have been slow, but he feels they will increase later in the year.

Within the next week, there will be a sample video on display in the Student Center to provide demonstrations to prospective buyers, he said.

Some students liked the idea of a video yearbook.

"I like the idea," Christopher Beck (EG 89) said. "The only problem is that it would be tough to get people to sign it."

According to Gary Albanese (BE 88), the video will be successful as long as a wide variety of activities is included.

Jon Buchwald (EG 89) said, "I feel the yearbook in video form will provide students with an opportunity to relive their college years throughout their lives."

system of warm-blooded animals, is usually transmitted through the bite of a rabid animal.

However, if saliva from a rabid animal comes in contact with an open cut, other animals or people can be infected through "indirect exposure to rabies," Smyser said.

"Once an animal or human gets the disease it is fatal, [however, the virus] has an incubation period when it can be prevented," Smyser explained, "although the best prevention is to avoid exposure to the disease by avoiding exposure to wild animals and vaccinating pets."

According to Smyser, prevention measures to deter the spread of the disease are being implemented through a Delaware-Maryland joint project.

"We are trying to prevent the spread of rabies further down into the Delmarva trapping and vaccinating [unexposed] raccoons in a five-mile area below the canal, hoping it will create an 'immune barrier' to the disease."

Raccoons in the area would not be able to pass the disease further because they would not be able to become infected, Smyser added.

There is a post-exposure treatment for people called the human diploid cell vaccine, Russell said.

The vaccine stops the virus before the incubation period is over and the disease takes hold. Animals which have the disease, he added, must be destroyed.

"There is no sign or symptom that you can put your finger on that says this person or animal has rabies," Russell said. "There are changes in behavior and neurological signs, but a lot of animals can live fairly comfortably with the virus and don't show symptoms."

Fall TV Review

New season has mix of drama, comedy, thrills

by Corey Ullman

Assistant Features Editor

Fall — what a wonderful season.

Television — what a concept.

Put the two together and the possibilities are endless.

Yes, it is that time once again. Leaves fall, footballs fly and network executives battle it out for the most popular and profitable TV lineups.

Let it not be said that variety is lacking. From soaps to sitcoms, from kids to cops, there is a slot for even the most finicky viewer to nurture (or numb) his mind.

"The Cosby Show" and "Cheers," consistent Thursday night favorites, are back. Not surprisingly, NBC and CBS have attempted to cash in on the success of these two hits by showcasing rip-offs of them.

Of the 22 new programs this fall, slickness without substance seems to be the lowest common denominator.

Fashion magazine gloss and cool Dolby audio offer yet another glimpse into the 1980s era.

But hey, it's hot, it's happening, it's well . . . entertainment.

• "Frank's Place," CBS, Monday, 8 p.m.

Chez Louisiane is a New Orleans version of Cheers — sort of. Frank (Tim Reid) is a New England professor who inherits the southern eatery from his father, but not his father's restaurateur finesse. Silly gags and sketchy story lines run rampant. The saving graces of the show are its colorful characters and decent acting. It could be promising.

• "thirtysomething," ABC, Tuesday, 10 p.m.

ABC executives knew what they were doing when they placed this series in back of "Moonlighting." That dial won't be touched.

A humorous and poignant look at middle-class life, "thirtysomething" is by far one of the best new shows this season. An excellent cast is headed by Ken Olin and Mel Harris (by the way, Mel's a girl), who play a young married couple confronting the trials of new parenthood and the resulting alienation of best friends. It's definitely a realistic portrayal of life in the Haagen-Daas lane.

• "Hooperman," ABC, Wednesday, 9 p.m.

John Ritter, of "Three's Company" fame, shows he is capable of much more than stupid pratfalls and gimmicks. Working for the San Francisco Police Department, Hooperman is a likable character who is not afraid to show his emotions. An offspring of the Take 5!

'Pick-Up Artist' offers a shallow view of romance

by Kevin Donahue

Senior Sports Editor

Once in a great while, a movie comes along that makes you laugh and cry; a movie that makes you realize your common humanity; a movie that draws you into sympathy with the entire rigamarole of the human condition. You leave the theater saying, "Ahhh, life . . ."

Then, there's The Pick-Up Artist, after which the first question on my mind was, "What should I eat now?"

Not that The Pick-Up Artist is all that bad. Compared to other things you can do in two hours — root canal, or watching this season's edition of the Hens' football team bumble through the first half of its latest loss (game, I meant game) — it borders on pleasant.

It does share a certain somnolent feature with root canal, too. It puts you to sleep.

Quickly. Inevitably. Mercifully. Forgive me if I'm a bit spotty on the plot. I succumbed.

The Pick-Up Artist follows the adventures of Jack Jericho (Robert Downey, last seen in Rodney Dangerfield's Back to School), self-proclaimed and self-absorbed woman killer. Jack stands in front of his mirror and practices such surefire lines as, "Has anyone ever told you that you have the face of a Botticelli and the body of a Degas?"

He scours New York City spouting this drivel to his particular type of woman — one that breathes oxygen, seemingly — hoping to find a nice, unwitting female with the mental dexterity of an elephant.

Which brings us to Randy Jensen (Molly Ringworm . . . er, Ringwald), who challenges Jack to make good on his offer, and my first problem with this movie: Ringwald as a sex object.

To be frank, Ringwald is miscast. Randy is a 19-year-old woman who knows a bit about, and is jaded by, the

Ringwald, though, generates as much sexual excitement as Nikita Kruschev reciting wheat quotas in the Serbian peninsula. She has, unfortunately, fallen into her John Hughesian stereotype — the cute 14-year-old struggling to understand the mores of adolescence — and seems unable to escape.

Jack doesn't see it this way. Halfway through the movie the invertebrate turns into a sweetheart of a guy and, you guessed it, falls in love with Randy.

There is a subplot in the film which involves a mobster, Randy and her alcoholic father (played by — who else? — Dennis Hopper). The two plots burp and gurgle along next to each other, sometimes getting quite confusing as writer-director James Toback tries to interweave them.

The final result is a contrived, unfocused script, with fickle characterization and an unsteady eye on human nature. Whatever Toback tries to say in The Pick-Up Artist, I never found it.

Funk's revolutionary war

by Chuck Arnold

Managing Editor

Over 20 years after the first British invasion, the war still goes on.

Two new funk releases, Black Britain's Obvious and Madame X's self-titled LP, continue the transcontinental battle over tea, taxes and chart positions. These contrasting debut albums, which represent the breadth of their genre, both borrow from the greatest funk warriors of the past and present.

Black Britain, a five-man group from England, succeeds in creating its own style by mixing elements of rap, reggae and traditional funk. To its credit, the band never allows one part of the formula to dominate the whole product, producing a singular compound.

Six tracks on Obvious were produced by Ted Currier, who also produced George Clinton's Atomic Dog. The remaining four cuts were produced by Peter Wilson, who has previously done legwork for the Blow Monkeys and The Jam. This diverse and experienced production team should be commended for molding the raw talent of Black Britain without taking away the group's "edge."

Side one of Obvious is full of dance tracks that give you something to think about — on and off the floor. With the notable exception of "Funky Nassau," a right-on-target cover of The Beginning of The End's underground classic, the songs on side one speak to England's young working class.

The title song is the most striking example of Black Britain's socio-musical philosophy. Lead vocalist Ron Elliston, who sometimes sounds like a pumped-up David Byrne, sings about "messing round in the city/taking drugs in the city/getting laid in the city."

OBVIOUS

Black Britain makes its talent Obvious on its debut LP.

In effect, "Obvious," coupled with the rebellious "Black Britain Man," could well be titled "The Young Man's Guide to Partying and Protest in England."

The second side of Obvious is darker and more moody, with only scattered flashes of sophomore excess. "It's Not Material" and "Real Life" are mid-tempo numbers dealing with material worlds and fantasy worlds, respectively, and

"Freetown Boy" is a lovely, lilting cut concerning the fight for voting rights in the West African seaport.

While Black Britain offers an appealing alternative, Madame X fails to distinguish itself from veteran nasty-girl groups like Vanity (or Appollonia) 6, Klymaxx and the Mary Jane Girls. Furthermore, in the wake of recent

...new TV season has comedy, drama, thrills

creators of "L.A. Law" and "Hill Street Blues," this series has nowhere to go but up.

• "The 'Slap' Maxwell Story," ABC, Wednesday, 9:30 p.m.

An OK story with an OK plot. Dabney Coleman stars as lackadaisical, cigar-smoking "Slap" Maxwell, an aging sports reporter in the Southwest who is on his way out. An occasional chuckle or two is about all this series is worth.

• "Tour of Duty," CBS, Thursday, 8 p.m.

Somehow, somehow, it seemed inevitable. With the recent slew of Vietnam War movies at the box office, the epidemic was bound to spread to television. Despite the saturation of the subject, "Tour of Duty" proves to be a great show with a comparable soundtrack. Story lines and characters are built around the premise of "Platoon" — the gung-ho private and the squabbling between the lieutenant (Stephen Caffrey) and sergeant (Terence Knox).

What is appreciable about the series is the equal time it spends depicting both Vietnamese and American points of view. Although there is no evidence of drugs and foul language is minimal, there is a substantial amount of violence on "Tour of Duty." Will viewers consider this suitable prime time entertainment? Only time will tell.

• "A Different World," NBC, Thursday, 8:30 p.m.

Can some of that Cosby magic rub off on the newest saga of the Huxtable family? Doubtful. Denise Huxtable (Lisa Bonet) is off on her own at fictional Hillman College, experiencing those wonderful things that college kids do. The problem with this college world is that it's too different from most. A 26-year-old roommate? Saccharine relationships and white-bread jokes make up most of the half hour.

Bonet's weak acting cannot support the show. Maybe her grades will be better.

• "Wiseguy," CBS, Thursday, 9 p.m.

The mob never looked so fashionable. Ken Wahl plays Vinnie Terranova, an undercover FBI agent who spent time in the slammer to successfully infiltrate the mafia. Now that he's in, he'd better watch his step. "You mess up, we drop you in a hole near the turnpike," says head mobster Sonny Steelgrave (Ray Sharkey). Dirty dealings and deadly games are the main components of this series, which is surprisingly worth the viewing time.

• "Beauty and the Beast," CBS, Friday, 8 p.m.

A classic gone prime time. And you know what? It's good. Romance and trepidation fill the underground fantasy world where beautiful attorney Catherine Chandler (Linda Hamilton) and leonine Vincent (Ron Perlman) meet.

Vincent, disfigured yet gentle, lives with his father in a secret dwelling beneath the New York City subway. He nurses Catherine back to health after he discovers her left to die by muggers. The two become friends — he offers her a release from the maddening world, she offers him friendship. But it's more than that . . .

Tim Reid stars in CBS's "Frank's Place" on Mondays.

• "Private Eye," NBC, Friday, 10 p.m.

Shadows, silhouettes and scruff — the main ingredients in the latest cops-and-robbers series. Private detective Jack Cleary (Michael Woods) inherits his dead brother's agency and partner Johnny Betts (Josh Brolin). The two are at odds, but always manage to get the job done. A twist to this otherwise run-of-the-mill detective story is its era — 1950s chic all the way.

• "Once A Hero," ABC, Saturday, 8 p.m.

Let me just say this: ABC should learn from their mistakes. If you reach back into the dusty corners of your consciousness, there may be a vision of a grown man running around in tights and a cape. If not, you know why.

"Once A Hero" runs a close second to its stylistic predecessor, "The Greatest American Hero," in mundane entertainment. Jeff Lester plays Captain Justice, a superhero who will fade into oblivion if people stop reading his comic book. Let's hope they switch to science fiction.

• "Everything's Relative," CBS, Saturday, 8:30 p.m.

Julian and Scott Beeby are two brothers who share a Manhattan apartment. Big brother Julian is a product tester; little brother Scott is a construction worker concerned with big brother's love life. Add a meddling mother and the plot is complete. A few laughs here and there are possible, but everything's relative.

• "Leg Work," CBS, Saturday, 9 p.m.

Claire McCarron is the Nancy Drew of the 1980s. Played by Margaret Colin, McCarron is a former assistant district attorney who opens her own detective agency and cruises Manhattan in a Porsche. She's sharp . . . and broke. Colin does an excellent job presenting a warm, likable character. It's worth a look.

• "My Two Dads," NBC, Sunday, 8:30 p.m.

Here's the story: girl meets boy, girl meets boy's best friend, girl gets pregnant. Eleven years later, girl dies. Who's daddy?

Now there's an 1980s concept for you. Ward and June don't live here anymore. Greg Evigan ("B.J. and the Bear") and Paul Reiser ("Diner") play dad to 11-year-old Nicole, who is about as precocious as they come. Kind of corny, but kind of cute.

• "Dolly," ABC, Sunday, 9 p.m.

The variety show is back in full swing with the girl from the Tennessee mountains. As always, Dolly Parton comes across as a natural, warm person, despite the cosmetics. With guests like Burt Reynolds and Whoopi Goldberg, the show moves and is actually entertaining. Maybe this country girl can put the variety show in a new light.

OK couch potatoes everywhere — this is your season, so get to that set and turn yourself on to some promising entertainment.

If not, you can always study.

...new groups join funk's revolutionary war

solo works by Janet Jackson, Sheila E. and Jody Watley, Madame X seems stale and contrived.

Madame X suffers from a lack of focus and song development that leads to far too many murky, tiresome passages. This is primarily because the trio — Iris Parker, Valerie Victoria and Alisa Randolph — can't decide what it wants to be.

Producer Bernadette Cooper, former drummer of Klymaxx ("The Men All Pause," "Meeting in the Ladies' Room") doesn't provide the necessary discipline here to attain the type of consistency she had with her old group.

"I Wonder" and "I Want

Your Body" are Princely rip-offs that, in an effort to play on the Purple One's characteristic sparseness, end up sounding like cheap imitation funk. The title tune is a self-promoting attempt at the sort of funk-jazz fusion Teena Marie is best known for. The neo-classical "Cherries in the Snow" is a pompous, string-laden composition that falls flat on its operatic vocals.

When Madame X does piece together fragments of its own identity, the results are pleasantly surprising. "Just That Type of Girl," the current single, is a hedonistic treat with an enticing Oriental hook. The song, built on a simple bass idea, has enough heavy breathing and slinky vocals to put it in the same league with

Vanity 6's "Nasty Girl."

"I'm Weak for You," a nocturnal ballad, is highlighted by improvisational guitar and piano solos that add a touch of class to the sexual trippery.

Trippery? Didn't that go out with John, George, Paul and Ringo?

Hens look to pull out of dive

by Jeff James
Sports Editor

It should have been the biggest football game of the year.

It could have decided the Yankee Conference champion.

Instead, tomorrow's game at Delaware Stadium between the Hens and the University of Massachusetts (1-3 overall, 1-2 in the Yankee Conference) will carry little — to no — significance for either team.

The matchup is a good one, with both teams having basically the same strengths and weaknesses. Still, it could prove to be as exciting as last weekend's 'scab ball' in the NFL.

Because when two teams with bruised ego's get together, something interesting is sure to happen.

The Hens (1-3, 0-3) are off to their worst start in 20 years. And UMass, the pre-season conference favorite, stumbled clumsily through its first three games before getting on track last week by trouncing Rhode Island, 42-7.

So both squads will be looking for some answers, and more importantly, some respectability.

"We really don't worry about winning conference games or where we'll end up in the conference," halfback Gil Knight said Monday. "We're just going to play hard. We haven't given up yet."

What may be most discouraging for Delaware is that they have played hard in their first four games. But they haven't been able to find a lineup that could play itself out of a paper bag, let alone win games.

"I think Delaware is ready to bust out, and we're really concerned about it," said UMass head coach Jim Reid. "The defense has the potential to walk all over you."

But in past weeks, it has been other teams that have been using the Hens' defense for a door mat. Opponents have rolled up an average of 417.8 yards per game, mostly via the big play route.

Shutting off that big play, which has also been a problem for UMass, may be the difference in tomorrow's game.

For Delaware, that means the secondary — or just 'toast' for short — will have to shadow receivers Jay Dowdy and Dan Rubinetti. And the defensive front needs to put pressure on quarterback Dave Palazzi, who is completing 59.7 percent of his passes.

Offensively, the Hens will have to try something new: scoring early.

If they can get some quick points, they may be able to stick with their game plan and finally get some production from their running game.

If not, quarterback David Sierer will be throwing plenty of balls in spread end James Anderson's direction. And if Anderson can get within 10 yards of the ball, he'll catch it.

With Delaware out of the conference race early, getting up for the game may be difficult.

If Delaware doesn't come ready to play, UMass will do what other Yankee opponents have done.

And it won't be pretty.

FIRST DOWNS: The Hens have won all 11 meetings in the series, including every game since 1980.

great...but we let the momentum we built get away from us."

That momentum quickly shifted Rutgers' way as Delaware then felt Maryland déjà vu.

Freshman midfielder Noelle Durko scored for the Knights late in the first half to tie the game.

The half ended 1-1, but the Hens were all shook up — physically, that is. Injuries plagued practically the entire Delaware starting lineup, but none were serious enough to sideline them.

The Hens second half started as badly as the first had ended.

At the 30-minute mark, Rutgers was granted a penalty shot when Bradley inadvertently got the ball stuck under her pads.

A one-on-one confrontation. A challenge. A situation Bradley thrives on.

But this time Rutgers' Denise Boone was sharper. The senior lifted her shot over Bradley and into the net for a 2-1 Rutgers lead.

Delaware was falling apart.

They got their chance at a penalty shot a few minutes later, but weren't as fortunate. Rutgers' goalie Renee Clarke made a great save.

"A lot of credit should go to their goalkeeper," said Hitchens. "She did a real fine job today."

However, with 3:31 left in the game, the Hens' wakeup call arrived. Rosenthal put in her second goal of the game to even the score just as she did last week in the game against West Chester.

"Today's tying goal wasn't any better than the one last week," said Rosenbaum. "They were both really satisfying."

Once again, regulation would not decide the contest. It was yet another overtime.

But, unlike the West Chester game, Delaware dominated the extra period.

Scally, who had been turned back all day, finally scored what proved to be the gamewinner.

The Hens won by playing their game. But they only played their game for about 40 minutes.

"We have to stop getting into lapses," Scally said. "We have a tendency to get too relaxed and that's a major thing to be worked on."

"If we play intense throughout the 70 minutes," said the forward, "we'll win."

And avoid any more close calls.

...Delaware blanks West Chester

Daniello, off Horn's third assist, drilled a 30-yard shot into the back of the net. Later, freshman Scott Southall outran a West Chester defender on a breakaway, and nudged the ball to Thomas, who netted it for the sixth goal.

Dominating a game from wire to wire is a new thing for the Hens this season. Perhaps getting their butts handed to them last weekend by nationally-ranked Old Dominion and William and Mary helped wake Delaware up.

"I think the pace we played [at the tournament] helped us," said Ron Kline.

"We had that half-step edge that [Old Dominion and William and Mary] had on us," agreed coach Kline.

Now that the Hens have snapped their losing streak, and been the bully for once, it's back to ECC competition Saturday at Drexel.

"This is a big win to carry into Saturday," Evangelista said.

Delaware blanks West Chester

by Jon Springer

Sports Editor

Special offer: double your team's season scoring output in one day!

Sound too good to be true? For the Delaware soccer team, it couldn't be.

Led by a relentless 16-shot assault, the Hens clobbered West Chester University, 6-0, Wednesday at Delaware Field.

This is the same Delaware (2-8 overall, 0-3 in the East Coast Conference) team, believe it or not, that had dragged six-game losing, and seven-half scoreless streaks into the game. The same team, believe it or not, that had scored only five goals all season — while allowing 28.

"We weren't lucky," said head coach Loren Kline. "We work all year for this sort of thing."

About 20 minutes into the game, the Hens' Dwayne Robinson scored what turned out to be the deciding goal.

"It felt awesome," said co-captain Tom Horn, who had one score and a school record-tie three assists in the game. "Once we scored, it felt great to be winning."

The Hens apparently liked that feeling. Less than five minutes later, Robinson, on a pass rocketed from Rich Evangelista, netted his second goal of the game.

Delaware's domination continued as Horn corralled a long pass from co-captain Ron Kline and scored the goal that chased Rams' goalkeeper Andrew Nelson from the game.

In the first half, Delaware's veterans — Robinson, Horn, came off the bench to score twice, and sophomore John Daniello scored his first of the season to put the Rams (3-7-1) in their tomb to stay.
