FOOTBALL

Big time football? They keep telling us that Delaware football will never go big time. Tell that to Bucknell who lost 51-16 or West Chester, a team that was undefeated before leaving Delaware Stadium with a 31-3 bruise for a memento.

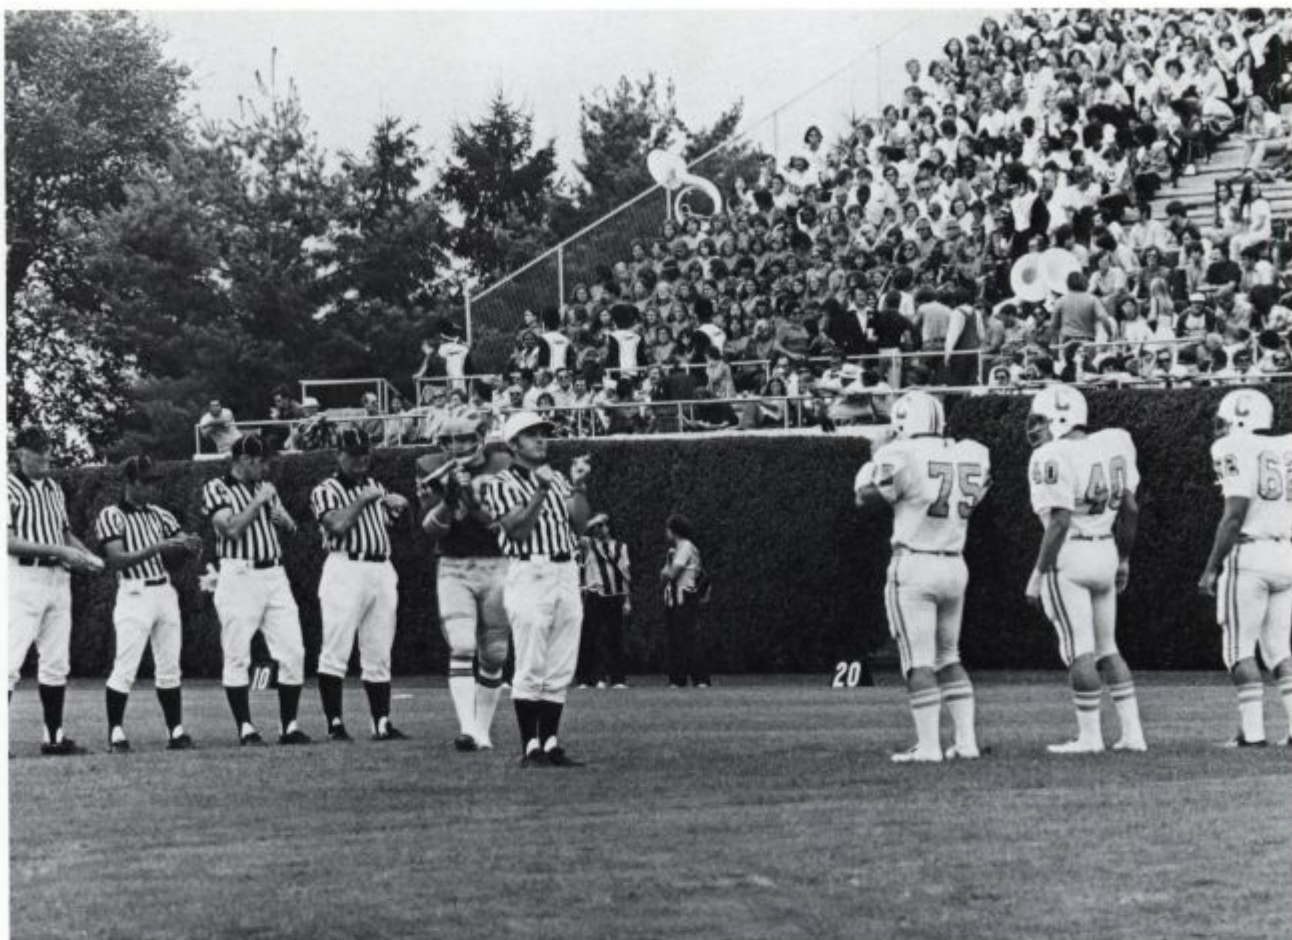

But what is big time football anyway? Villanova and The Citadel are major college teams and they were demolished 49-7 and 48-12 respectively, or maybe disrespectfully. Temple was ranked in the Top Twenty of all major colleges and the Owls were lucky to salvage a 21-17 victory over the Blue Hens in Veterans Stadium. On the other hand, Central Michigan is preparing to enter the upper echelons and the Chippewas fully embarrassed Delaware 54-14 in the nationally-televvised Division II championship game.

The 1974 Delaware football team finished with a 12-2 record and showed unexpected flair in the form of an occasional passing game. But, then, it was a year for flair as the Hens provided at least three of the most exciting games in Delaware football history. The Temple game, the 22-pt fourth-quarter surge that surprised McNeese State 29-24, and the 49-11 maiming of the mercenaries from Nevada-Las Vegas were all highlights of a season that ended on a disappointing note, a note that even further confuses the definition of big time football.

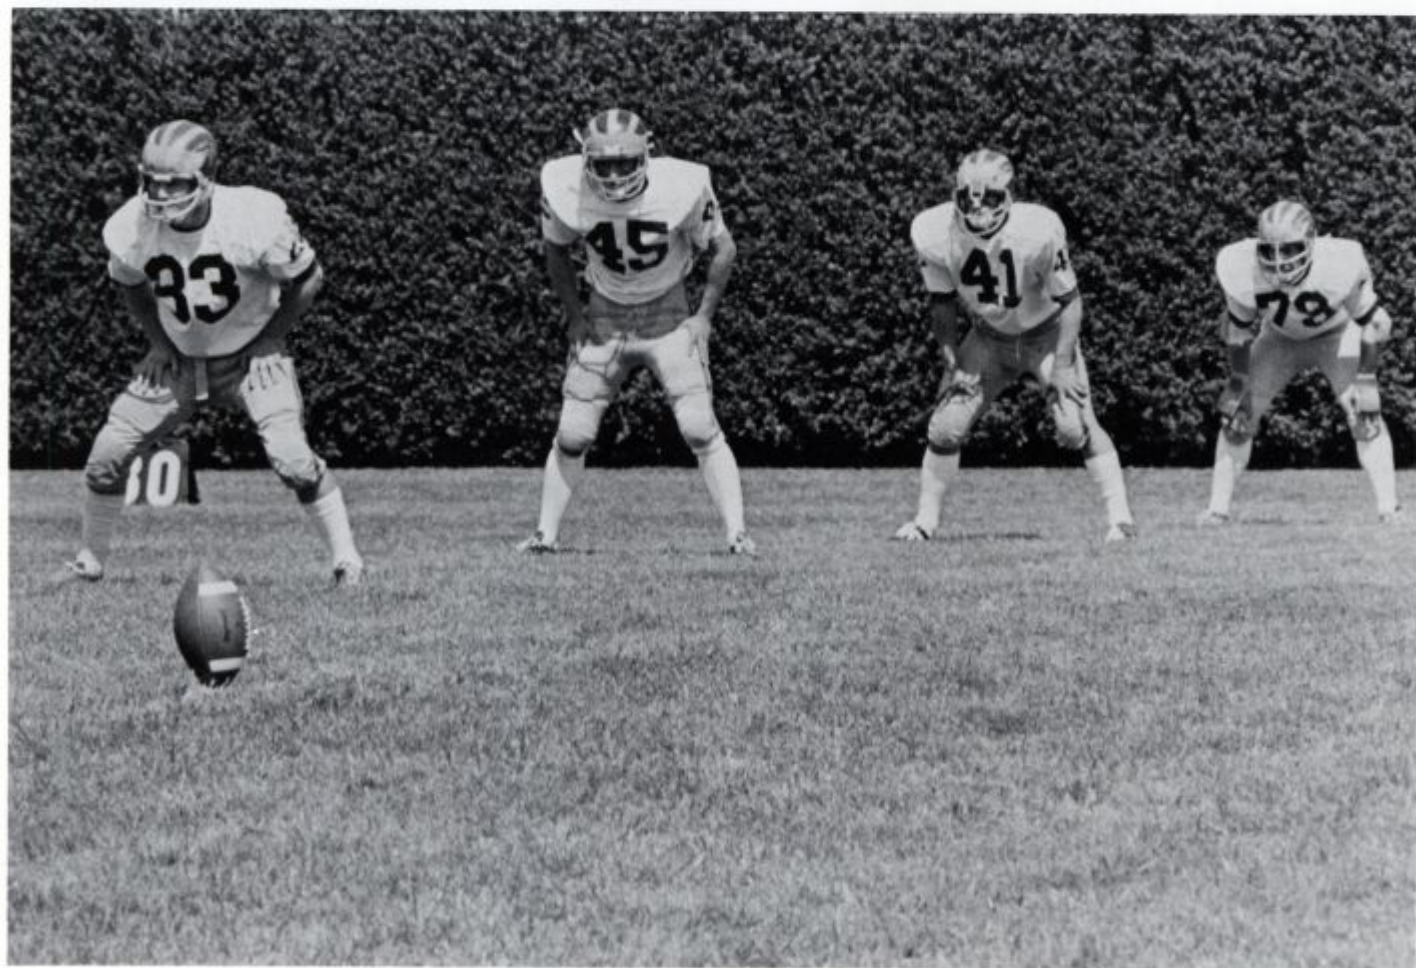

CROSS COUNTRY

Led by co-captains Larry Tomsic and Richard Zimny, Coach Edgar Johnson's runners finished a respectable season with a 6-5 log. This winning percentage was a marked improvement over the 6-8 and 4-9 records of the past two years.

The Hens showed great promise however as they far outdistanced such teams as Rider (45-18), Catholic U. (38-19), and Towson (50-15), while losing only one lopsided race to Lehigh (15-47).

SOCCER

Three one-point losses to Rider (0-1), Villanova (1-2), and Bucknell (0-1) spoiled an otherwise excellent 6-2-3 performance by the Blue Hen booters as the squad registered three shutout wins and two scoreless ties. A 7-0 victory over Franklin & Marshall provided the single game scoring high for the Hens.

Senior Jeff McBrearty led the booters in goals scored (6), shots (54), and total points (8), while Chriss Donahue captured assist honors with 4. In the goal, John Downham accounted for 64 of the 70 saves and received credit for four of five shutouts. As a team, the Hens outscored opponents 22-10 and recorded a commanding shot edge 311-155.

Junior halfback Chip Smallwood was cited as First Team All-Region for his fine defensive play, as well as being named to the ECC Western Division All-Star Team along with teammates McBrearty, Steve Spence, Alan Erickson, and Dave Ferrell.

FIELD HOCKEY

The women's field hockey team opened the schedule with five straight victories en route to a final regular season log of 8-2-1 for Coach Mary Ann Hitchens. Losses to Glassboro (1-2) and powerful West Chester (0-1) and a tie with Ursinus (1-1) were the only blemishes on the slate. The Hens posted four shutout triumphs in their first five games, including an 8-0 demolition of William Patterson.

In the post-season All-College Tournament, the squad chalked up victories over Montclair State (4-1) and Kean (2-0), while knotting Rutgers (1-1).

The junior varsity showed great promise as a ten game winning streak was spoiled only by a season-ending loss to Ursinus (0-3) and a tie with West Chester (2-2).

BASKETBALL

Coach Don Harnum's cagers were outrebounded in 17 of 25 games en route to a poor 12-13 record against a number of mediocre opponents. A 4-4 conference log excluded the Hens from post-season competition.

A late-summer trip to Panama left the coaches optimistic as the cagers returned to Newark with a 9-1 exhibition record, losing only to National Panama (76-79).

The Panama trip gave little indication, however, that the team would spend the winter losing to teams like Drexel (64-66), Towson (71-82), Widener (47-49), and Glassboro (63-69). The squad settled for third place in the Porrecco Cup Tournament after losing to Mercyhurst (64-80) and besting New Hampshire in the consolation round 69-57.

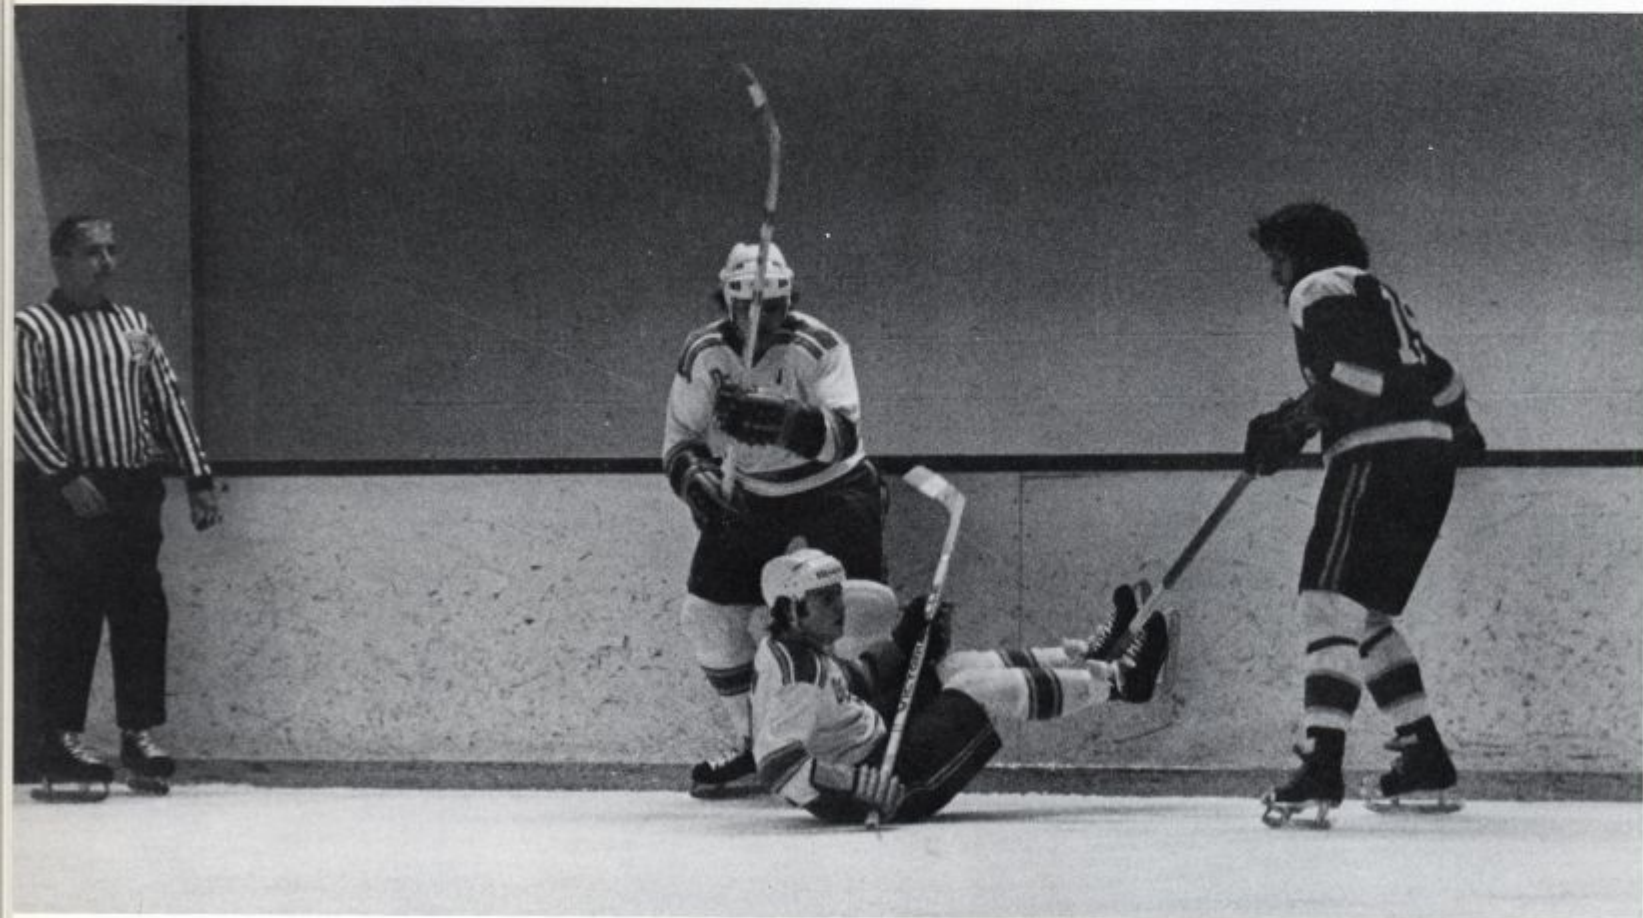

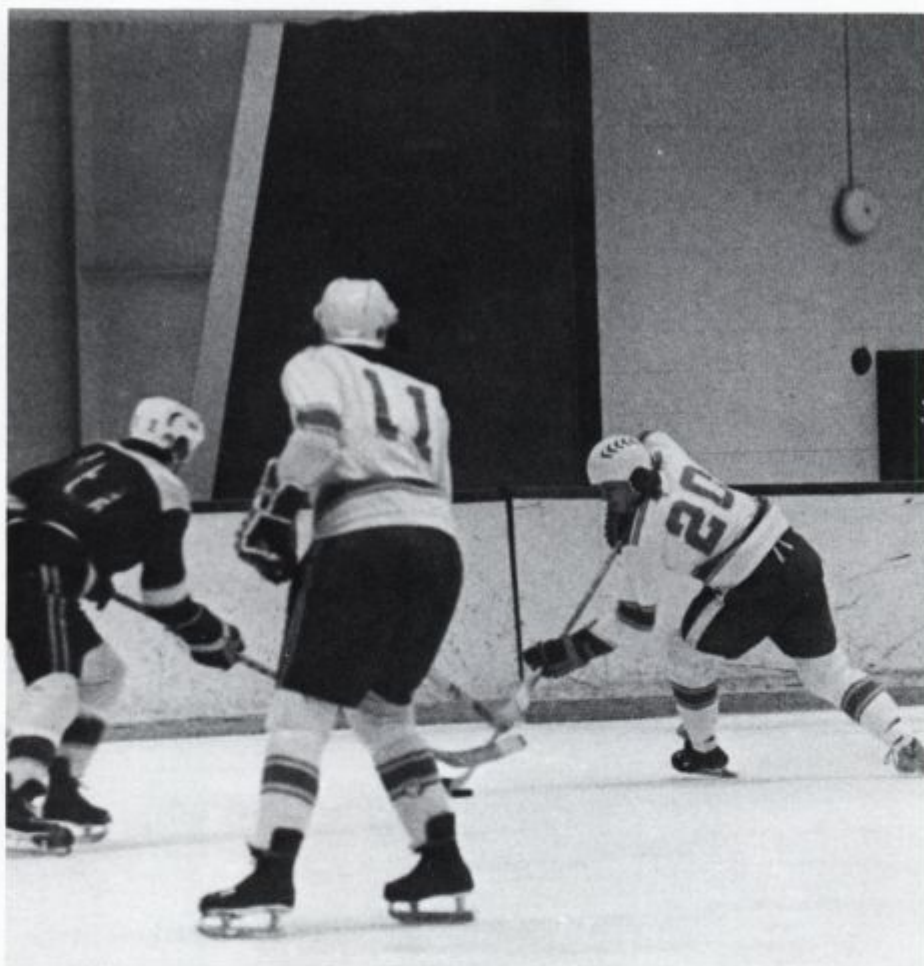

Bill Sullivan, the team leader in field goals (139), assists (166), total points (332), and scoring average (13.3 ppg.), was named to the ECC Western Section All-Star Team. Steve Schlachter took team honors as leading rebounder (196).

ICE HOCKEY

In its third year of league play, the Delaware ice hockey squad swept through a tough Delaware Valley Collegiate Hockey Association schedule and finished as circuit champions for the second time. The Hens, 24-8-5, bested West Chester to enter the championship tournament as front-runners, and then defeated the Academy of New Church (9-2) and West Chester (5-3) to win league honors.

Led by the league MVP and top scorer, Pat Monaghan, the skaters defeated the DVCHA All-Star squad 6-4. Sharing league honors with Monaghan were Curt Radebaugh and Charlie Chiczewski as top defenseman and goalie respectively.

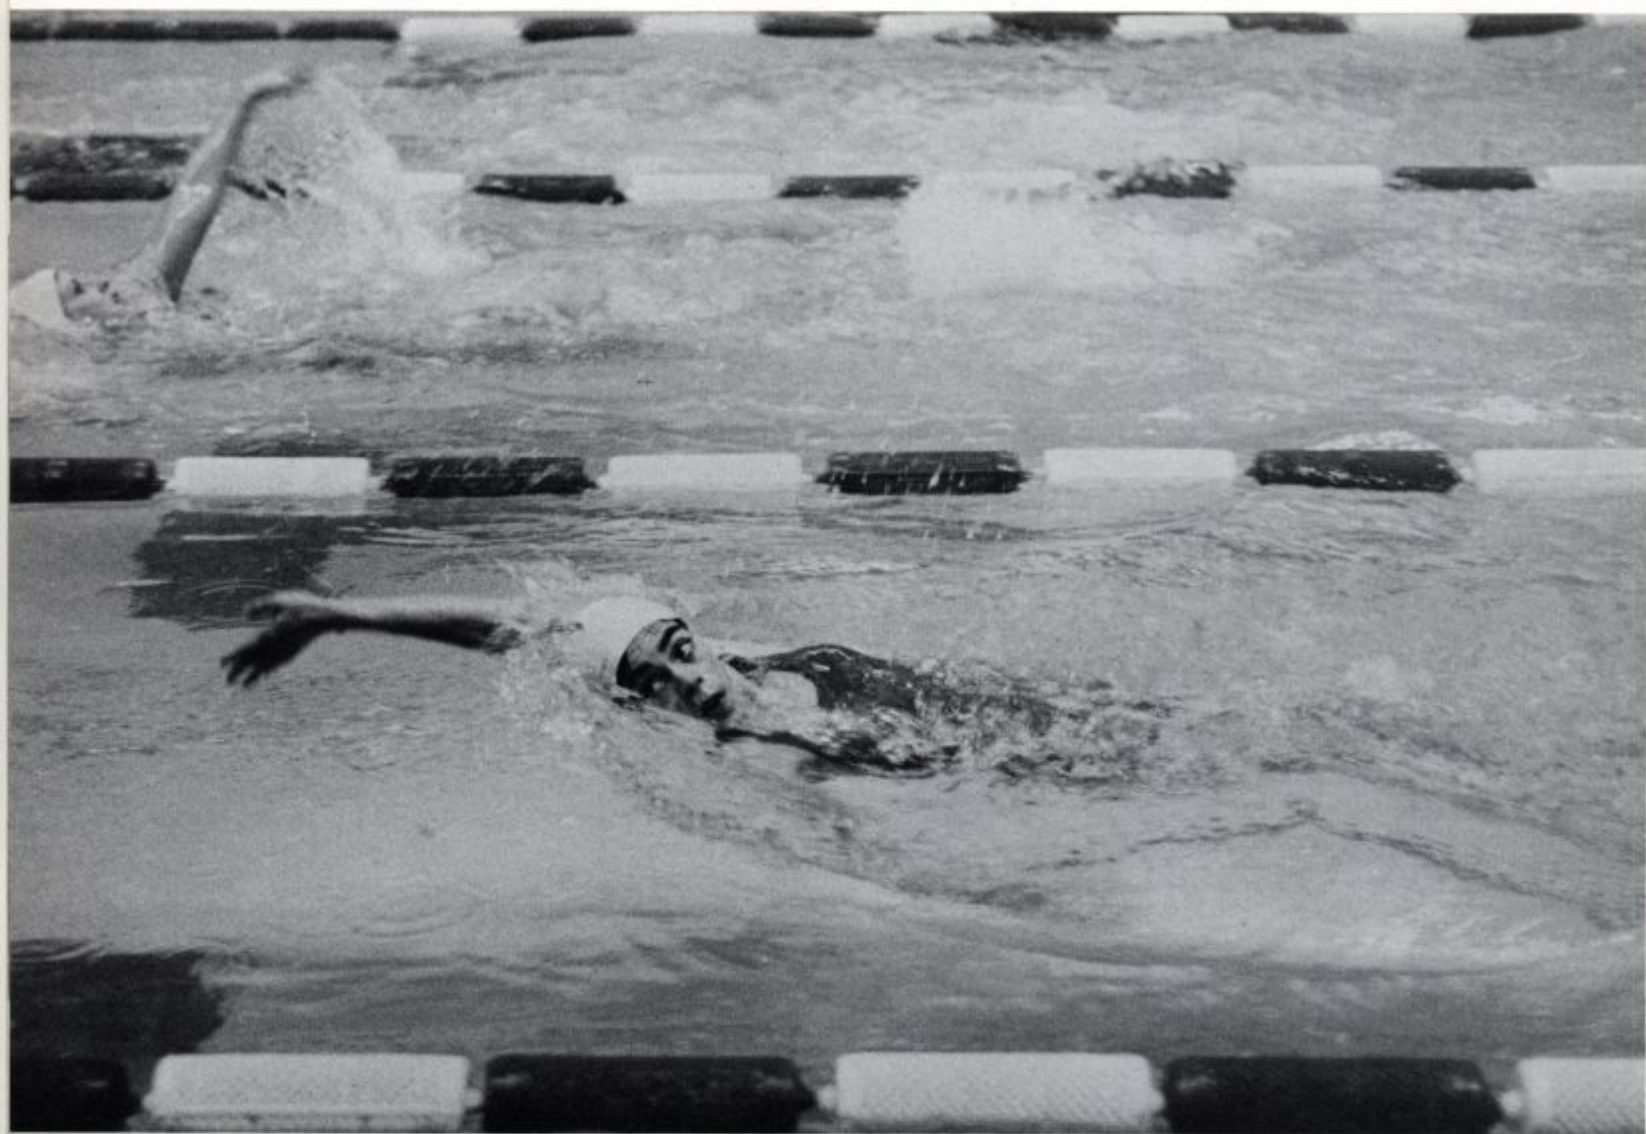

WRESTLING

It was a disappointing year for the Delaware grapplers as they suffered eight straight losses to open the season and finished at 3-8 on the year. Routs of Drexel (36-8), American U. (30-9), and Lafayette (30-12) in part made up for the wounds inflicted by four one-sided matches against Rider (9-28), Virginia (7-31), Pittsburgh (6-30), and Gettysburg (9-30).

The wrestling squad finished fifth in the East Coast Conference, although Delaware did have two individual champions in Ed Janvier and Roy Baker, both of whom repeated their trips to the Nationals where they finished at 1-1 and 1-2 respectively last year.

WOMEN'S SWIMMING

The Delaware swimmers finished 8-3 for Coach Jill Coffin and broke every school record except the 100-yd medley relay and 100-yd. breaststroke in the process.

The Hens sent a contingent of twelve to the EIAW Eastern Regionals, their largest representation ever, and the swimmers finished eleventh in a field of sixty. Kathy Pembroke won the team's only gold medal in the regionals with a 28:6 clocking in the 50-yd. backstroke.

Pembroke, Phyllis Beck, and Karin Murgatroyd each qualified for the AIAW National Championships where Pembroke finished 13th in the event she swept at the regionals.

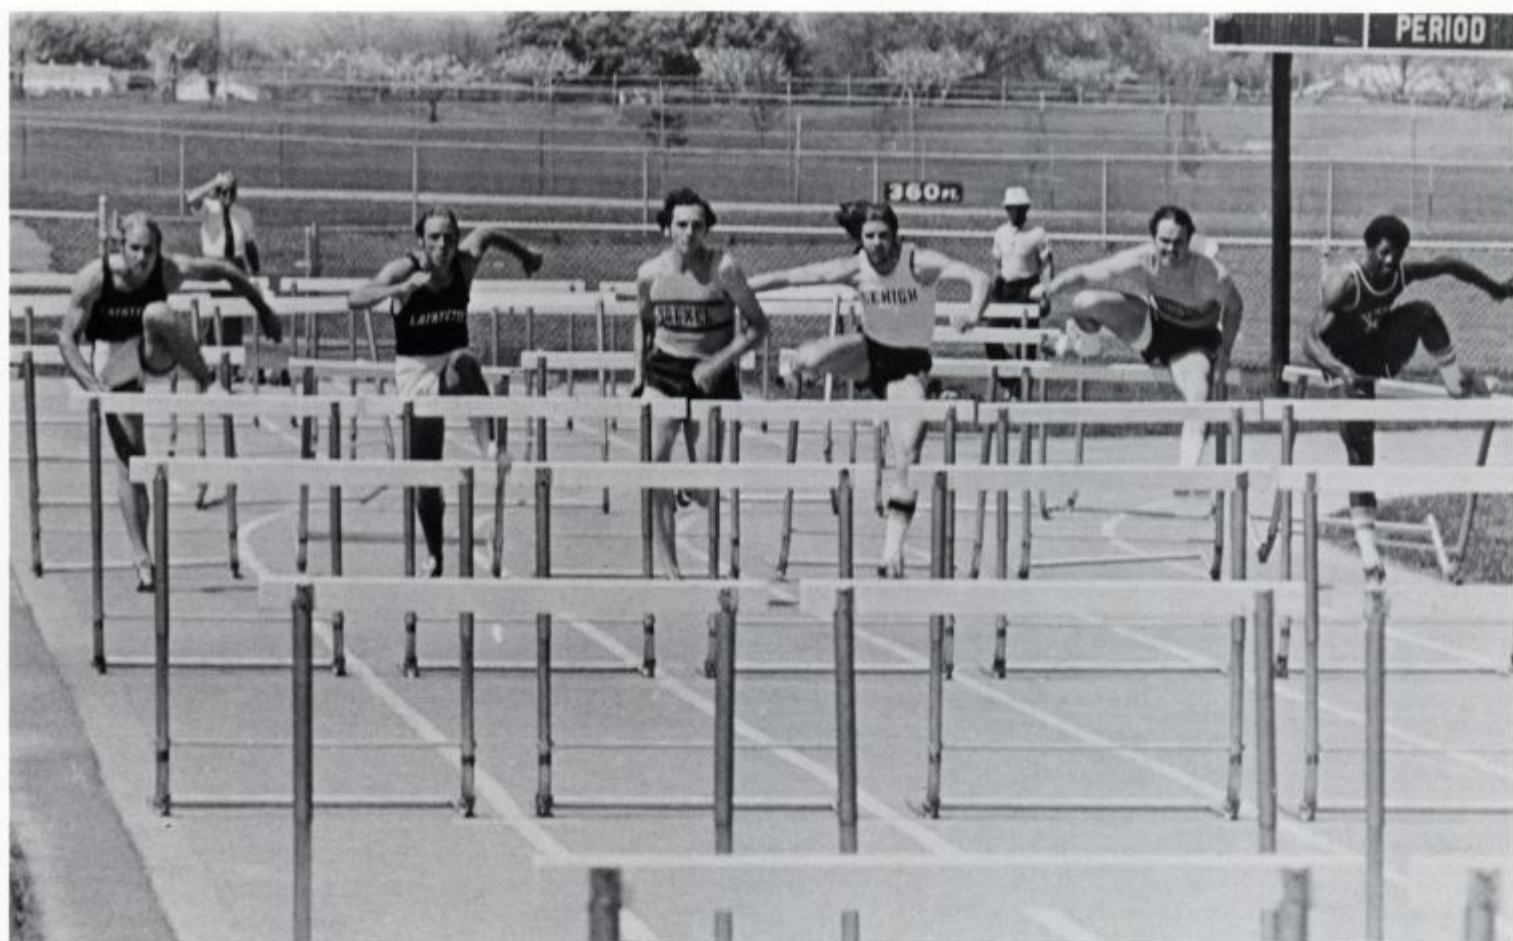

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

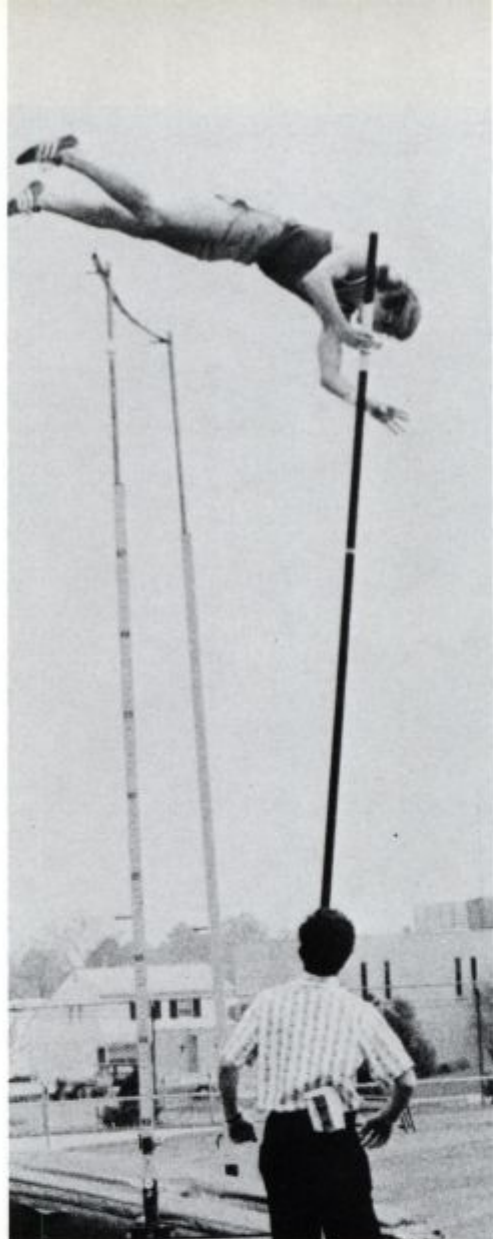

The scoring of Karen Horney, Sharon Howett, and Mimi Senkowski enabled Coach Mary Ann Hitchens' cagers to earn their first-ever seed in the post-season Eastern Regional Basketball Tournament. The Hens, 11-3 in regular season play, failed to advance, however, losing to Maryland (65-76) and West Chester (64-84) after defeating Ursinus (56-53).

The only losses during the season came to Maryland (54-61), Immaculata (50-65), and William Paterson (60-64, OT). After the initial loss to Maryland, the Hens swept six straight games before falling to Immaculata.

While facing the same tough competition as the varsity, the j.v. cagers completed a satisfactory 7-7 season.

TRACK

After an opening dual loss to Connecticut and St. Josephs by identical 34-67½ scores, the Blue Hen track men settled down and finished with an improved 4-4 tally.

A small winning streak against West Chester (73-72), Drexel (92-58), and Rider (92-31) balanced out the season, but the Hens were unable to improve much on last year's tenth-place MAC finish, this year placing ninth in the new ECC Championships. The Blue Hens did have an individual champion, however, in discus-thrower Chris Michaels.

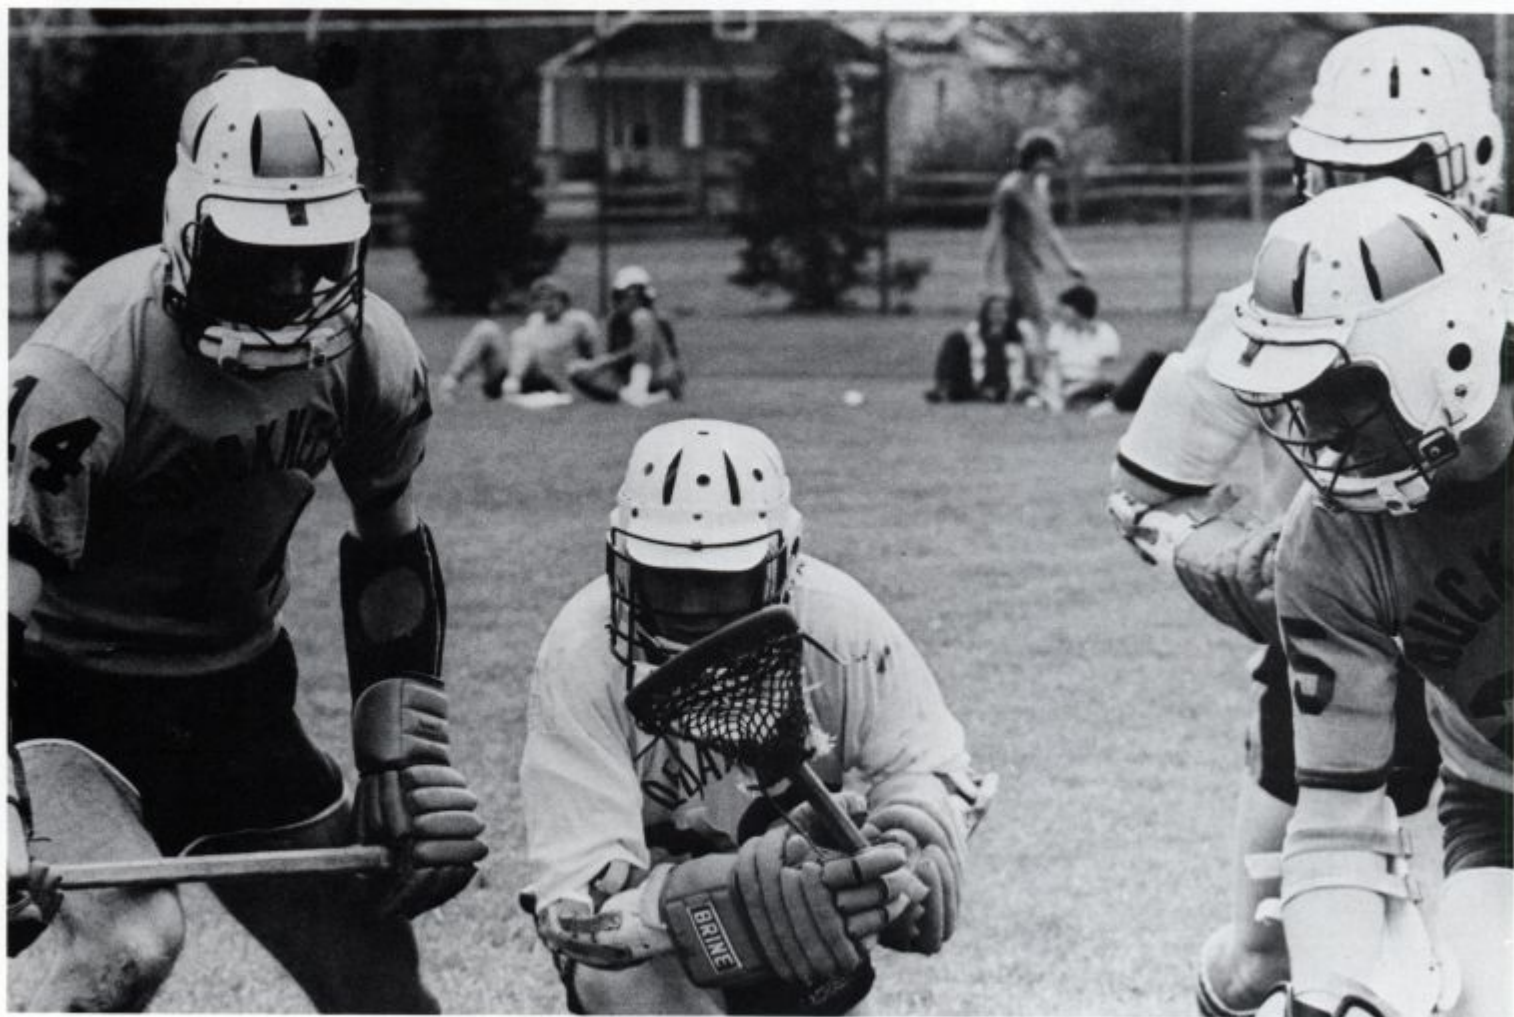

LACROSSE

Despite reports to the contrary, amateur lacrosse at Delaware is dead. Recruiting has virtually eliminated a junior varsity program where the non-elite who could not learn lacrosse in high school might be taught and coached.

The new elite allowed the 1975 Delaware lacrosse team to finish 10-2 and win the new ECC division with a 4-0 conference mark. Unfortunately, the new ECC alignment has eliminated Franklin & Marshall and Washington College, two of the old MAC powerhouses.

Coach Jim Grube's new youth corps combined with the veterans to finally upend F & M 14-7, a task that has been of primary concern for a number of years. The brightest spot of the year, however, was the play of sophomore Rich Mills, who led the nation in scoring mainly through his fine assists.

In a few years, the new high school recruiting program will make Delaware a powerhouse too, but at the expense of those who did not go to high school around Baltimore or Long Island. Is it really worth it in the end?

BASEBALL

Strong pitching and clutch hitting had the Delaware baseball team headed for certain post-season play as they took a 26-3 overall mark into the playoffs against Eastern Section victor Temple. The Hens beat the Owls' best pitcher 6-4 in the opening game of a best-of-three series, but then the dread "Delaware Choke" set in and the team dropped the next two games 1-3 and 7-14 in Philadelphia.

The Blue Hens finished 28-6 with a 7-1 ECC mark, the only conference loss coming against Lehigh (5-6). Virginia Commonwealth (4-5), American U. (5-11), and Navy (1-2) provided the only other defeats for Delaware. Having little to gain, tournament-bound Seton Hall and Penn State cancelled final games against the Hens.

SOFTBALL

Although there were occasional complaints about an easy schedule, the women's softball club completed their first season of play with a perfect 8-0 record.

Hitting proved to be the key to the club's success, although the pitching of Sue Brady accounted for a number of the wins. The club produced 27 hits to overwhelm Franklin & Marshall 29-6 and 18 hits to crush Towson 22-7. Clutch hitting came from Cindy Looby, Audie Kujala, Karen Horney, Mary Wisniewski, and Sue Sowter.

The club also defeated the Delaware Shamrocks (4-1), William Patterson (3-1, 7-2), Harford Community College (14-4), and Rutgers.

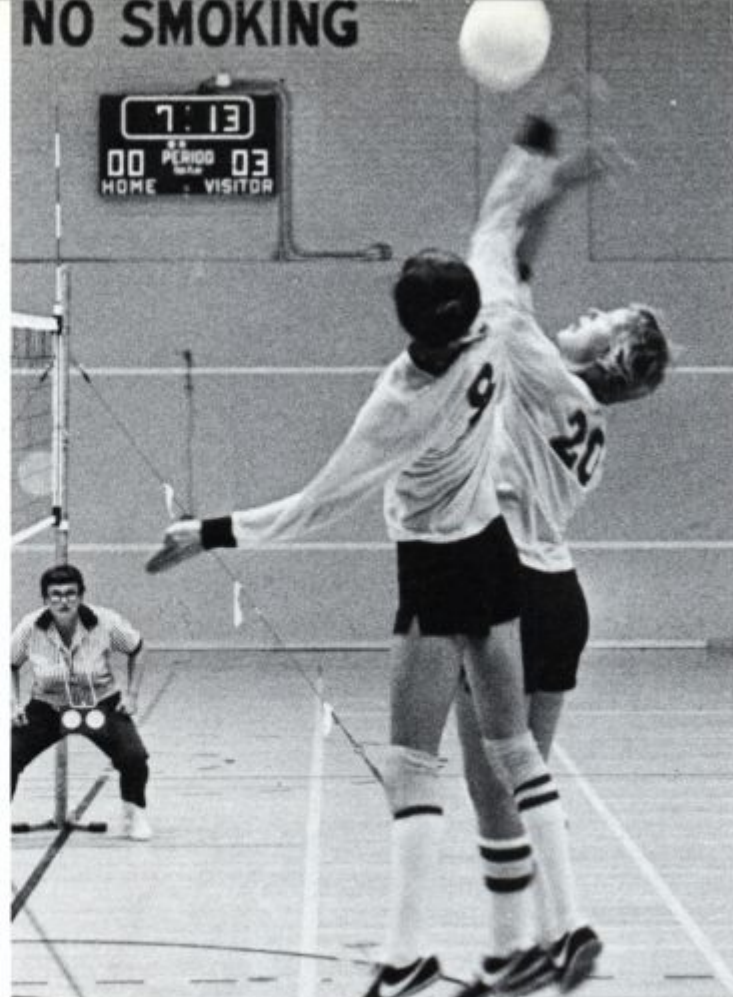

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL

Coach Barbara Viera's spikers compiled an excellent 20-7 record against individual opponents for the 1974-75 season, a slate which also included a shared title with Maryland in the Madison College Invitation Tournament.

Statistically, the six categories of play were dominated by Mary Ryan and Wendy Sorrick, as Ryan led in Spiking Percentage (.337) and Kills (89), while Sorrick captured honors for Fewest Service Errors (8), Serving (2.41), Passing (2.01), and Most Perfect Passing (67).

The junior varsity, 12-3 on the year, was led by Susan Schanche in Spiking (.286), Sue Fahey in Fewest Service Errors (2), and Debbie Dean in Most Kills (23), Serving (2.82), Passing (1.91), and Perfect Passes (28).

"Hey wait man, I got something intellectual to say to you Now how does it go? Oh, yeah Life is nothing but a bad play, and we're nothing but poor actors, too blind to read the script, and too deaf to hear the prompter I think that's it . . . How'd ya like it?"

The Inspector and Mortimer shook their heads sadly and walked away.

"Okay, be that way, jerks. Youse guys don't appreciate good philosophy," drooled Studentbody. "Somebody bring me a stinkin' beer."

The pair of detectives shuffled away quietly and hacked their way through dense intellectual undergrowth to a rutted and well-worn dead-end called The Hullihen Way. There to greet them was an overstuffed cat not very far out on a limb and grinning widely and woodenly.

"Hello," said the cat, I'm a college president and I don't do anything — for a lot of money. I also will not negotiate with that Studentbody and I refuse to even acknowledge the existence of Dodo and his gang until it comes time to ask for money."

"Not another one, Inspector?"

"I'm afraid so, Mortimer."

"If there is anything you gentlemen would like, please see the Bursar first," grinned the cat.

"No thank you, we'd only like to find out what happened to the University Community. It looks like a joke of a public relations job to me," said Clyde.

"Okay, here's a copy of my Community Design Report. You can read right there in print how we are such a happy university community."

"You really believe that, don't you?"

"I have to. I'm the college president and I helped write it. By the way, that will be fifteen dollars for the report and five dollars for processing and records. Please pay the Bursar as you leave," said the cat as he started to fade from view.

"One more thing. Why don't you and the other administrators cut down your enormous salaries to reduce expenses?"

By this time, all that was left was a wide wooden grin and a howling echoing laugh.

"Sickening, eh Inspector?"

"Let's go, Mortimer. I'm sure we haven't seen the worst yet."

"Right-o," came another intruding voice behind them.

"And who might you be?" asked Clyde.

"I'm the Mad Hatter and this here is my friend the March Hare. We're both quite daft but we're also heads of the UDCC. You know, student (heh,heh) government."

"Are they all like you?"

"No, there have been some honest exceptions, but most of us just like to take money and do nothing. Some even set up their own businesses. We handcuff the honest ones and feed them raw propaganda. Sometimes we even like to make things so complicated that all we can do is sit down and laugh at ourselves."

"He's right, they are daft," exclaimed Mortimer to no surprise.

"Would you like to attend a meeting? Nobody else does. The only time anybody shows up is when we discuss disbanding — then they all crawl out of the woodwork to stop us. When we shelve plans to disband and decide we need help to continue, they all crawl back into the woodwork like termites. And they call us mad!"

"No thank you, I think we'll pass up your offer in favor of seeing more of the sights."

"Now that's daft. You should have gone to a real educational institution instead of wasting your time here."

"We were sent to look for something."

"What? The Holy Grail?"

"No, the University Community."

"You have a better chance of chasing the Grail. Hah-hah, Hah-hah."

"Yes, well thank you for your encouragement, but where would you suggest we should go now?"

"Certainly not to the UDCC meeting. Nothing ever happens there. I would suggest that you go watch the action over at Hullihen. Both the Administrators and the Board of Trustees are meeting on the croquet green with the winners allowed to raise tuition rate or room charge — their choice."

A tree with a toll door provided easy access to the field for the duo and they took seats in the gallery where a few friends of the Dodo had gathered for a good laugh. Out on the field the administrators and trustees wandered about dressed as poker-deck royalty, hitting lesser cards with mallets and making promises in triplicate to jokers.

"You new here, boys?" asked a referee.

"Yes, I'm afraid that we are," answered Clyde with a sigh of disgust.

"Well, those low numbered cards are professors who fell below their published word output for the year. After they're beaten, they're sent to South America. The jokers are city officials who keep pulling out the electric plugs."

"And who are you?"

"I'm from Food Services. They figure we're not involved in enough big-time carnage, so they hire us to referee these matches."

"Off with their heads," cried a trustee.

"Cut down that budget," heckled a friend of Dodo's.

In the heat of the match play, a trustee took an unaimed swipe at the Chesire cat, but the mallet passed harmlessly through the grin and struck somebody who was trying to do his job despite the clamor.

"En loco parentis," laughed the cat. "Tighten the thumb screws."

"I've seen about enough. How about you Mortimer?"

"Me too, Inspector. Tell Mahoney to get us out of here."

(Not yet, bozos. One last debacle to top off a wasted day. Look behind you for the trial of the Knave of Hearts)

The two ragged adventurers turned to find an absurd courtroom drama being acted out behind them. The Mad Hatter and the March Hare were on the Witness Stand babbling incoherently. The judge, dressed as a dogeared one-eyed jack, covered his eyes and ears and waved a mallet in the direction of the Knave of Hearts who was protesting the charges of stealing great sums of money from the Mad Hatter and the March Hare.

"Wadda ya mean I started my own business with it? Who own what? My compatriots and I merely spent many thousands of dollars on stamps and phone calls. I personally talked to Alpha Centuri six times and mailed four moving vans and a Sidewinder missile to a friend in Tibet," stuttered the Knave of Hearts.

"After much profound deliberation, I must say that I believe you and because you are so obviously innocent of such malicious charges I will be forced to fine you eighty cents. The Mad Hatter and his friends have all disappeared, I see, leaving the debt in the hands of the Dormouse, who is an honest fellow and so deserves to be handicapped by this deficit. Dormouse, I wish you and your newly elected friends would disband. That is all Who took my mallet? Where is that stupid Knave of Hearts and that tart?" droned the judge.

"Can we go home now?" asked Mortimer of the air.

(Yeah, I guess so.)

"Please don't torture us like this again. We didn't do anything to deserve this."

(I know, but I had to put up with it for four years guys.)

"Never," winced Mortimer.

(In all seriousness, I'd probably do it again, given the chance.)

"How?"

(It's a pretty decent place if you fight the over-whelming tendency towards mindlessness. Cretins like you saw are rampant, but you can fight them, or get around them if you want to. It all depends on your goals.)

"Wait a minute. They just handed me something here. A piece of paper."

(What is it?)

"It's your diploma printout from the computer. You fill in your own name."

(Oh.)

Brringgg--Brringgg.

"Hello, Austerlitz Mercenaries, may I help you? . . . What? You again! . . . You want us to blow up a computer in the Null-Zone? Are you joking? We'll have to fight the minions of the Carrot people, the Living Dead, and the Zombies! . . . Wrong . . . Same to you again you pompous clown."

(Stupid dolt.)

"Bloody cretin."
