BSU ratifies constitution

by Phaedra Ryder

The Black Student Union has finally reorganized.

"It became quite evident that the prior Black Student Union structure could no longer serve the black com-munity effectively," said BSU secretary Mary Johnson (EG 86).

The new constitution, which was ratified March 22, outlines the philosophy and new structure of the organiza-

The BSU's purpose as outlined in the new constitution is as follows:

· To represent all black students in educational, social and political matters. The will serve as the primary advocacy organization for all black students.

• To serve as chief liason between black students and the appropriate university administrative personnel.

To organize black students to deal effectively with the unique problems of blacks on a predominately white campus.

· To monitor the quality of student life for blacks.

 To coordinate activities which are designed to create a more enriching environment for black students.

In addition, the new constitution calls for seven elected officers instead of the original four. They are: president, first and second vice-presidents, corresponding and recording secretaries, treasurer and parliamentarian.

"There is a more even distribution of responsibility," said Johnson. "It allows for more direct student participation so that no one office is overtaxed."

In response to an earlier article's questioning the BSU's purpose, Johnson said that the BSU wants to better the lines of communication between the white and black communities on campus. The BSU, she said, is not attempting to segregate itself.

"If we were, we (black students) would not be here."

Some make gambling their only way of life

by Valerie Greenberg

The alcoholic is usually easy to spot. Stumbling, bag and bottle in hand, he or she smells of liquor. The drug abuser too is identifiable. Arms tracked with punctures, nose running or bleeding, he or she is either speeding or crashing.

But it is not as easy to spot the more than 8 million Americans who are compulsive gamblers. Nor is it to understand the destruction compulsive gambling causes the individuals, their families, their careers, their finances, and their sanity.

Compulsive, pathological, problem, or "sick" gambling, according to Dr. Robert Custer, head of treatment services division of the Veterans Administration in Washington, D.C., is a psychological addiction, with no easily recognizable signs, to the action, thrills and dreams that ride on cvery wager.

Compulsive gambling is defined by the National Council on Compulsive Gambling as a "progressive" behavioral disorder." The progression generally goes unnoticed until the behavior (gambling) becomes a disorder. What usually recreation in time becomes a compulsion. What usually begins as

The compulsive gambler's life is controlled by his gambling. His time, efforts, thinking, and actions are determined by the status of his gambling.

The creation and destruction of most problem gamblers, according to Custer, follows a predictable course:

He (three out of four are male) begins gambling as a teenager. He wins, usually one big jackpot.

.Then he thinks it is a sure thing-he can't lose, so he increases his bets.

Now he starts to lose, which hurts. But he believes he can win everything back if he just raises his bets a little more.

... He uses family funds until these are depleted. He starts borrowing, becoming deeper in debt and further behind on payments. But still he raises his

... He becomes more desperate, and he gambles more recklessly. About this time his marriage is in trouble. And he is in trouble with the law-bad checks, forgery, income-tax evasion.
...Then comes the "bailout." Someone, perhaps a relative, provides a substantial sum of money to keep the gambler out of jail or divorce court. The gambler, however, just sees the money as another big win. It sets him on a very rapid pattern of

The intentions of the pathological gambler generally are good, but they are just that-intentions, according to Custer. They block out the reality that in the long run he can't win. The problem gambler believes that he can make that single "big score" with one more crap game, one more

Well known violinist to give free recital

A well known violinist and a graduate of Julliard School of Music, Sylvia Ahramjian, will give a free public recital at 8 p.m. in Loudis Recital Hall on Sunday.

The recital, which is in conjunction with the "Faculty Exchange Series" between the university's department of music and the Wilmington Music School, will feature selections from Brahams, Strauss and Saint-Saens.

Ahramjian, who is the head of the string department at the Wilmington Music School, will be accompanied by pianist Robert Dodd Greene, a foreign language professor at West Chester University, who has performed in concert in over 30 French cities.

Ahramjian is also a faculty member at West Chester University, where she performs as a soloist and chamber musician. She is also a member of the Delaware Trio, an associate concertmaster of the Delaware Symphony, and a frequent soloist with orchestras in Delaware and Pennsylvania.

Students receive book collection honors

The winning book collections in the University of Delaware Library Associates' fifth annual contest will be displayed in Morris Library from June 5 to June 29.

The prizes, worth $100 and $50 to first and second place winners in graduate and undergraduate categories, were awarded May 2.

The first place graduate award went to Roland E. Bounds for a science fiction collection. Jean D. Anthony won second place for a collection about the Philippines.

Donna L. Godfrey won the first place undergraduate prize for her collection of Bibles and prayer books. Lorraine C. Murray's collection about American westward expansion earned her second place in this category.

Winterthur Program is honored today

A program honoring Winterthur Program in Early American Culture will be held at 10:30 today in the museum's Copeland Lecture Hall.

Dr. Alan Gowans, professor of history at the University of Victoria, British Columbia, will discuss "How to Go 'Round the World on a Work of Art or the Historical Uses of Art History."

There have been 219 graduates of the Winterthur Program, which is affiliated with the university and has provided graduate studies in American art since its founding 30 years ago.

James Morton Smith, director of the Museum, and University President E.A. Trabant will also speak. Graduating students will present their theses at 2 p.m.

Kuhlman readies for faculty senate presidency

by Valerie Greenberg

"The job of president is a big one, and I am ready to satisfy the role requirements and do whatever I can to help the faculty senate," said Dr. Michael Kuhlman, newly elected senate president.

Kulman, who served as faculty senate vice president this past year, was elected at the May 7 senate meeting to take over the presidency from Dr. David Smith for the 1984-85 term of office.

"The job of president is a multi-faceted one," said Kuhlman, an associate professor of psychology. "First there is the responsibility of running the senate meetings, keeping order, and making portunity to express their views in a fair and balanced

"The president is also a ecutive Committee," he said, "which meets weekly to help coordinate and facilitate senate committee activities."

Kuhlman said the president also attends student, faculty community functions, "acting as a representative for the faculty to various groups."

Looking back on the past academic year, Kuhlman said, "This was a good year for the senate. We got a lot accomplished. I hope we will continue to be as effective and as visible next semester.

"The senate allows the faculty to exercise its rights," Kuhlman said, "and it is an effective organization to consider, debate, change and form policies and programs."

Kuhlman said it is "ap-propriately difficult to predict" what issues will be hot topics on the senate floor next semester. "Committees need time to work out resolutions," he said, "and it would not be right to squeeze or shake a resolution out of a committee before they are ready."

He did say that he would like to see some discussion in senate concerning academic dishonesty, although, he said, "the senate may not be the place for final

Kuhlman said he believes art of the solution to the problem of academic dishonesty at the university lies with the students. "We need to increase the sense of mutual obligation and community among the students," he said, "but faculty and administrative action is probably a more likely solution."

Kuhlman spoke very highly of his predecessor, Smith. "He did an extremely good job and deserves all the credit he has been given. David was unbelievably hard-working and effective," he said. "We were lucky to have him as president, and I am lucky to have him as a model."

Smith will serve as a member of the Senate Executive Committee next in an advisory capacity.

Biden visits campus for commercial debut

by Thomas Brown

It was lights, camera, action Monday when Sen. Joseph Biden arrived on campus to film commercial footage for his upcoming election bid.

Closely surrounded by a group of student supporters and a television crew, the Delaware democrat reminisced of his days at the university and spoke of the issues both on camera and informally after they were turned off.

Biden was a student at the university from 1961 to 1965. He resided in Harter Hall and said the rooms were much nicer then, describing his as a "suite" complete with living room and bathroom.

He said the rules were stricter, though. "If women or alcohol were found near your room, you were out."

Biden said he senses an attitude change among students today, partly due to different standards.

"When I was here the standard was 'ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country," he said. "Today it is 'are you better off than you were four years ago?' What kind of standard is that?"

Biden said he believes the Russians pulled out of the Olympics to send a message both to the U.S. and the world because relations are so bad between the two countries right now.

RSA'thaws' campus with refrigerator pick-up

by Libby Arnold

The guys were at it again. Waking people up at 9 a.m., catching girls in their underwear and causing warm beer, sour milk and rotten fruit

Fifteen hundred refrigerators were picked up Wednesday and Thursday between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. from every area of campus.

The students who collected the refrigerators, Wednesday knocked on one university freshman's dormitory room door at about 9:15 in the morning. She said she assumed it was a girl on the floor since it was so early and told the visitor to come in. "I was standing there in my robe and hot curlers and no make-up!" she said. "I was so embarrassed."

JEM Leasing International, the refrigerator rental company the university used this year, does more business here than at any other college or university in the country, according to sales manager Steve Dempsey (BE 84) sey (BE 84).

"All of the refrigerator companies give Delaware bids because we have more types of housing that don't already have them than other schools do," said Dempsey, who also serves as the Resident Student Association's "refrigerator coordinator."

"Every year we get about 50 guys to meet in front of the Student Center who want to work for us," he said. "We have two or three trucks that follow a set route, and the guys got a raise to $4 an hour this year.

"It's fun work. You get to meet a lot of people and make money at the same time. And all the girls on campus are always saying how good-looking the guys (who collect the refrigerators) are," Dempsey joked.

"I was standing there in my robe and hot curlers and no makeup!! I was so embarrassed."

One common complaint of students' is that the refrigerators are picked up before finals week. Dempsey said this is because often students are through with school before the last week and they would forget to leave the refrigerators, and also because he would have trouble getting workers during finals week.

JEM has a list of all students who rent refrigerators at the beginning of the year, Dempsey said, and students are supposed to notify the company if they change addresses. If students do not report address changes by May 22, he said, they will be charged $100.

JEM's rental charges are $45 a year for a small refrigerator and $58 for the larger size.

Cheers and jeers

As the semester once again passes away, The Review tallies its votes for our traditional cheers and jeers to those deserving. Cheers are deemed to the following:

Cheers to the Delaware Undergraduate Student Congress and its president, Chris Christie, for accomplishing all his original campaign goals.

Christie fought an against-the-odds battle for the passage of published faculty evaluations in the faculty senate, reinstated Winter Commencement for the first time since World War II and pushed for a much-needed student activity fee.

Cheers to the students who voted in this semester's student government elections, as well as all those who supported the activity fee.

Cheers to both the men's and women's lacrosse teams, both of which advanced to the NCAA tournament.

Cheers to Blue Hen Athletes of the Year Karen Emas and Chuck Ganci, whose dedication and good sportsmanship bring both recognition and respect to Delaware.

Cheers to the Arts and Science College Council for keeping the Bachelor of Arts in Liberal Studies program intact, offering students the option of creating a program best suited to their career goals.

Cheers to the university's black community and those involved with the creation of the Martin Luther King House on campus and the establishment of a National Merit Scholarship here. Delaware opened university doors to students in the Red Clay School District with an official university liason to aid these students in their curricula.

Cheers to the university for breaking ground on its library expansion project to provide some much-needed space in the state's largest library.

And finally, cheers to all those who took the time to write The Review and contribute to its editorial debate, whichever side they took on the issues

But life has its darker side, and the following deserve jeers for helping douse the light:

Jeers to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for playing power politics with the lives of its athletes and suffocating the greatest of all benevolent exchanges-the Olympics-with its recent boycott. Jeers to all those students with the vision and ability to lead their student government but without the ambition to

Jeers to Dave Levinson, who threw a tantrum before the entire Democratic Party after an independent survey showed him to be lacking at the polls in his race for governor last

Finally, jeers to the university for dipping into nonresident wallets again next semester for an additional $300 in tuition. University accountants have been continuously pricing Delaware out of its own market, as well as closing the state to the academic world beyond its borders.

Growing Up=

Ciao for now

It says here on the label that they're 100 percent acetate, and they came in this cool bag with a handle and stuff. The first guy's Cap, the other's Gown. They're going to be my friends for the next couple of weeks. I'm letting them stay in my closet.

I'm hoping that, after the ceremony, Gown will still be my friend. I was thinking that maybe we could form a gospel group. Gown could stay on my body, and I could clap my hands and mouth the words to Aretha Franklin records. Pretty cool idea, huh?

I can't think of much to do with Cap after it's all over. He's, well, pretty different. He's not like other caps. Maybe we could get him put in Dick Tracy's Rogue's Gallery. They could give him a tough name like Flattop, or Mortar Head. Yeah, Mortar Head. That's cool.

But the big day comes June 2, and me, Gown, and Mortar Head get to go down to the football stadium and sit through this o.k. ceremony. And everybody else brings their buddies out of the closet, and we sit in the stands and wait until our school is called, and then we stand up, and then we sit down again. It's pretty cool. My parents are coming and

And, just because Gown and Mortar Head are in my closet, I get cards with money in them and presents and my parents take me out to dinner and stuff. It's pretty a School was o.k., but I like this part better. It's pretty good.

It's pretty tough to think about your schoolwork when Cap and Mortar Head are around. 'Cause, you know, you're studying, and then all of a sudden you put Gown and Mortar Head on and go running into your roommate's bedroom and start practicing that march that's so queer. And you start laughing, and your books sit there until tomorrow when it's too late anyway to do anything with them. But, the thing is, if you don't do anything with them, you don't get to wear Gown and Mortar Head down to the Field House. I wish those guys would just stay in the closet.

They've got this friend, too, Tassel. But nobody knows what to do with Tassel, 'cause he kind of just hangs to the right, and then to the left of Mortar Head, and then he's in front of your face and you just knock him in back where nobody can see him anyway. I wish somebody'd figure out what to do with Tassel.

I don't know why these guys are making me act like this. 'Cause this isn't what you'd call normal for me. Like, I used to act different. Somebody told me that I had to get a job resterday and I just laughed and told them that after this was all over I was going home and watching T.V. I never used to say stuff like that.

But anyway, my father says that the opera ain't over until the fat lady sings. Are they going to have a fat lady at the Field House? That would be cool.

A fond farewell

Editors:

As an active and interested student at the University of Delaware, I have followed the progression of various university issues both inside and outside the pages of The The subject of tenure has cropped up at various times throughout this period, but never has it hit home so keenly as when I read the May 11 article concerning the denial of tenure to Dr. Louis Cusella of the communication department. Never have I been so moved to write a letter to the editor.

Having undergone the tenure process second-hand (my father is tenured), I can only sympathize with the stress Dr. Cusella must have experienced throughout the process and imagine his disappointment at the denial. Having had the privilege of taking a class with Dr. Cusella, as well as two each with Drs. Thompson and Slater, I can only express shock and a sense of loss at their departure from this university.

I am not going to comment on the relative merits and demerits of the tenure process, for that is an oftrepeated debate. What I do want to comment on, publicly, is the impact these three professors have had on my experience at Delaware.

I spent much of my time ere "floating" in an academic sense and depending largely on extracur-ricular activities for a sense of satisfaction or real achievement. It wasn't until I was accepted into the com department and started takclasses with the professors mentioned above, in particular, that I really felt excited in an academic sense. Their excellence and encouragement stimulated me to learn and their high standards spurred me to excel. I am leaving this university with a finer appreciation of learning and a greater sense of what I can do and-trite though it is-who I am. The role of these professors in particular, and the com department in general, cannot be underestimated in the development of these attitudes

Life goes on, and I have faith in Dr. Boyd's ability to rebuild the department he so competently put together to begin with. Still, I regret that future students won't be able to reap the benefits of Drs. Cusella's, Thompson's, and Slater's (and no doubt Jensen's) teaching. Terry, Dan, and Lou-thanks A LOT. I'm really going to miss you. Lori Hill AS84

Announcement

This is the final issue of The Review for Spring, 1984. The Review will resume publication on Friday, September 7,

The Review welcomes and encourages letters from university students, faculty and administrators and members of the community. All letters should be typed on a 60-space line and signed by their author. We will honor all requests for anonymity.

Letters should be addressed to The Review, West Wing, Student Center, University of Delaware, Newark, DE 19711.

The Semester in Cartoons

A PICTURE IS WORTH A THOUSAND WORDS, and over the semester, Review cartoonists have spurred debate with such biting satire as C.S. Wayne's work after the death of Soviet President Yuri Andropov, the outside press ban from Faculty Senate meetings and the special report on cheating at Delaware.

Sally Diederichsen's athlete as international pawn followed the recent Soviet Olympic boycott, while Valerie Greenberg parodied the recent uncontested DUSC elections.

Diederichsen's statements on El Salvador and the arrests following the Greek Games chariot race demonstrated editorial cartooning at its strongest, while Wayne looked lightly at the demise of Sen. John Glenn's presidential campaign.

But while he waits for that "one more," the destruction to his family, career, finances and sanity progresses. Crushing debts, lost families, shattered careers and suicidal depression, ac-cording to Custer, are par for the compulsive gambler's course.

The family becomes the brunt of the problem gambler's frustration and According to the Delaware Council on Gambling Problems (DCGP), 17 percent of wife abuse and 13 percent of child abuse cases are related to compulsive gambling.

Outside the home, compulsive gambling takes its toll in the work place. Ninety-two percent of compulsive gamblers, according to the DCGP, display decreased work performance. The American Insurance Institute company embezzlements; and compulsive gambling accounts for as much as 40 percent of all white collar crime.

Currently, according to the DCGP, there are approximately 6,000 compulsive gamblers receiving treatment. Unfortunately this is ment. Unfortunately this is only a minor fraction of the total population of compulsive gamblers.

And the number of problem gamblers is on the rise. With state lotteries, off-track betting and growing casino resorts, gambling has become acceptable and conveniently accessible. Presently, according to the DCGP, 44 states have some form of legalized gambling, almost $20 billion is bet legally each year, and 88 million Americans gamble on a regular basis.

However, one tenth that number are compulsive gamblers and, according to DCGP, up to $40 billion is bet illegally every year.

Fluffy-for here I go a wandering...Ciao mie amici, love always LAW.

This is to my TWO GREAT ROOMMATES, Alice Horowitz and Maurice Segal. Living in a "Three's Company situation this year has been one of the greatest experiences of my life. Alice, since our first moments in Russell C four years ago, until now-I could not have asked for a better roommate. AND MO-well you have shown me horizons I never thought existed...and you know what I mean, baby. You both mean very much to me and I know our friendships will continue after graduation. Your third roommate, Sue Marguccio. P.S. "Very hot, very hot!!"

Jackie "Quacky" Marquez-You made all these re‡!! deadlines worth coming to. We've got to keep in touch and prepare for next year's drunken deadline visits. have a great summer!! Love, Kim, your bestest Review buddy.

Students say 'no' to legalization of marijuana

by Mark Weinberg

Although marijuana remains the drug of preference (aside from alcohol), two-thirds of the college students surveyed in a recent nation-wide Newsweek poll said they were against the legalization of pot, almost 30 percent less that in 1975.

More than half of the students asked said they had tried marijuana, and of those an overwhelming number said it was for recreational use only. Cocaine was a distant second.

Marijuana use has declined by 12 percent over the last five years, the survey showed.

A survey conducted of incoming Delaware freshmen showed that support for legalizing marijuana has been declining since the 1977 peak of 62 percent. Only 27 percent of the freshmen surveyed are in favor of it now, said Dr. Carol Pemberton, associate director of the Institutional Research.

The same study showed that alcohol use has been increasing over the same period, except for a small down-turn in the last year or

Dr. James Inciardi, director of the university's criminal justice program, attributed the declines, in part, to an "increased conservatism" on campus and the country in general.

"Students aren't into drugs like they were a decade ago," Inciardi said. "The drug education programs are finally starting to take hold. Also, we have cycled out of the youth revolution of the 1960s. The greater conservatism is a by-product of this changeover."

Inciardi said this relates to the legalization question in two ways. "When you have only 27 percent of the incoming population in favor of legalization, there is no real constituency to push for a change in the law.

Also, as time passes, these very students will be the politicians that are in a position to make any changes," Inciardi said. "If only a quarter have any interest now, we're talking 5 to 10 percent will have an interest later."

"The legalization issue is practically dead," said Stephen Moores, director of training at the Resource Center, a drug and alcohol abuse prevention program that holds lectures and discussions on campus occasionally. "People aren't interested anymore because of the harmful effects-physically and socially.

"The use of marijuana is a way of being around each other," Moores said, "without having to learn how to relate to one another in a meaningful way."

Inciardi said research into the health consequences of marijuana are showing "that the drug is neither the 'devil drug,' 'weed of madness' or 'assassin of youth' that was alleged by some, nor the totally innocuous substance that was suggested by others."

Inciardi cited one study suggesting that smoking four "joints" per week "decreased vital lung capacity to the same extent as smoking as many as 100 conventional cigarettes during the same period of time."

Dr. Timothy Brooks, director of student life, was less optimistic about the results of the surveys the surveys.

"My office is looking into the possibility of what may be an increase in drug related activity," he said. "I have heard that nationwide there is less acceptance of drug use. I'm not so sure of that now."

Inciardi expressed doubt that marijuana would be legalized any time in the near future. "The majority of people in the country don't use marijuana, contrary to popular belief, so there is no real constituency that want the law changed."

Inciardi would like to see marijuana decriminalized, but not legalized. The term decriminalize means it is still illegal, he said, but the penalty for possession of small amounts is just a fine.

"I'm in favor of decriminalization because the law does more damage than good. You have to look at the costs and benefits of the prohibition," Inciardi said. The consequences of smoking marijuana are far less severe than the consequences of alcohol, yet in many states it is a felony."

Inciardi is opposed to legalization, however, because research has suggested the potential for harm with respect to long-term use.

"Until we fully know the answers to these research questions," he said, "we shouldn't even consider legalization."

Cyndy Sardoff (AS 87), agreed with Inciardi. "It shouldn't be legalized. If affects people's judgement too much. A lot of kids seem to live for pot."

Bob Paratore (BE 86), on the other hand, disagreed. "Smoking marijuana should be up to the individual."

Inciardi said "more people are using drugs than in the past. The vast majority are focused on alcohol and marijuana, and although more may be using drugs, they are using them less often. They're not as fashionable as they used to be."

Dr. Robert Wilson, a professor in the urban affairs department, agreed, saying "although drug use was once a part of the 'college experience', today's students can take it or leave it".

Delaware's Milligan takes his best shot

Ange Brainard

"I have a shot and I'll be ready."

Delaware native and Olympic heavy-weight hopeful, Henry Milligan along with seven other American contenders will compete for a spot on the U.S. Olympic boxing team June 6-10 at Fort Worth, Texas.

Milligan has been doing extensive training for the U.S. Olympic trials since December concentrating on building up his endurance, by running in road races every weekend, and building his arm strength by lifting weights two to three times a week – a rarity among boxers.

"Most trainers and boxers in general are in the stone ages as far as knowledge of fitness and training is concerned. They just think that lifting makes you muscle bound and doesn't help you, but hurt you."

During the week, Milligan runs and lifts weights, but as the fight gets closer he runs interval sprints – 440's and 880's.

"It really gets me into condition for boxing matches. Where you work real hard for a minute or two and then break"

Milligan's trainer, Charlie Messina, an amateur trainer for the past 10 years and promotor for seven of the 10, believes the best way to prepare for the trials is to spar with the best fighters and work with different types of boxers with different styles.

Special to the Review — photo by Bill Wood

Presently Milligan is working with former light-heavy weight Dwight Braxton.

"When you get in there with really good people," Mulligan said, "like the guy I'll be fighting tonight, you automatically have to be on your toes and thinking at all times. Good competition improves you, experience is the best teacher is what I guess I'm trying to say."

"To be on the Olympic team would be the pinnacle of his career," said Messina.

Although not a lengthy career, as yet Milligan so far boasts a 40-5 record with 30 knockouts, holding the U.S. Heavy Weight Title, the Golden Glove award and all this within three years.

Interested more in staying in shape rather than boxing, Milligan started boxing by answering an add in the paper offering lessons for interested potential boxers.

"I wasn't really serious about it at first. It was between my sophomore and junior year in college. I was just trying to stay in shape for football."

Milligan's fitness is not a result of his boxing ability but his boxing success is a result of his fitness.

"His physical condition is the best I have ever seen in any athlete," Messina said.

"That's where I win a lot of my fights," said Milligan, "because I come on strong in the last round when most others are tiring."

His 190 pound 5-11½ frame is misleading for some - until they get into the ring.

"Most people think that I should be bigger," he said. "People on the street say they think that I look like Henry Milligan but I'm not big enough to be him. It's just little ol'me."

DELAWARE'S PETE JENKINS takes a hit from Blue Jay defender Guy Matricciani in Johns Hopkins 10-3 opening round win in the NCAA tournament Wednesday in Baltimore.

Hopkins ousts Hens from nationals

BALTIMORE – It is extremely hard to beat the number one team in the country when one of your players is off the field and standing on the sideline.

Delaware Coach Bob Shillinglaw must have thought that as his eighth-ranked Hens' high-flying 12-4 season came to an expected end Wednesday afternoon as the penalty-riddled team surrendered to the 13-0 Johns Hopkins Blue Jays, 10-3, in the first round of the NCAA tournament.

Of the 11 penalties Delaware committed on the day, three of them resulted in Johns Hopkins' goals. The remaining eight penalties spelled constant pressure for goalie David Darrell and the tough Blue Hen defense.

"We were pressured a lot in the first quarter," said Darrell who responded heroically with 19 saves.

"The penalties hurt us, but their offense has so many great shooters. I was looking everywhere for shots."

The Blue Jay offense not only possessed talented attackmen, but it displayed balanced scoring. Of Hopkins' 10 goals, eight of them came from four different players who each scored two goals apiece.

The Blue Jays began the scoring at 4:46 in the first quarter when Steve Mutscheller scored from a Brian Woods' assist. The Hen defense, however, overcame its tentiveness and stayed within one point much through the opening quarter. In fact, the Hens' aggressive play forced the Blue Jays to call time-out after the home team committed a penalty of their own.

Unfortunately, after Hopkins regrouped, it came back to score three goals in the last 2:34 of the first quarter.

In the second quarter, following a Johns Hopkins penalty, the Hens scored an extra-man goal by junior Pete Van Bemmel along the right sideline with an assist by junior Pete Jenkins to make the score 4-1.

With the help of more Hen penalties, the Blue

Jays scored three more goals to end the half 7-1, the last goal coming one second following a Hen penalty. At the end of the half, the tournament-experienced Blue Jays had outshot the Hens, 25-11. "We played great defensively," Shillinglaw said.

"We played great defensively," Shillinglaw said.
"But our offense just couldn't score like we wanted it to."

Blue Jays defensemen Steve Dubin gets a lot of the credit for that. He had the job of guarding the Hens' scoring star Randy Powers. Playing man-toman defense, Dubin held Powers scoreless halting his season-long streak. Powers' season total of 53 goals and 21 assists, however, was only one point away from breaking the school record.

Penalties, again, plagued the third-quarter. Two of the Blue Jays three goals were with an extra man. One of those scores came with a two-man advantage when Delaware had two minute-long slashing penalties overlap one another. By the end of the one quarter, both teams had committed five SUDDEN IMPACT: Whenever the dialogue scenes run too long in "Sudden Impact," the film cuts to Clint Eastwood's dog Meathead urinating in an inappropriate location. Not since the monolith in "2001: A Space Odyssey" has there been a cinematic symbol so rich in significance.

A LOOK BACK

THE HOOTERS: What is a Hooter? "Down South they say it's the male sex organ," the keyboardist laughs. "Others say it's a female breast, a coke spoon or a hash pipe. Sex, drugs and rock 'n roll--that's what it's all about."

he Spring semester of 1984 begins its slow demise today with the last full schedule of classes.

Newark does offer remedies for students' study woes. Force of Habit appears tonight and tomorrow at the Stone Balloon. Rackett plays through Saturday night at Reflections and The Secrets hum all weekend long at the Prime Times Room in Ogletown. The Maytags play at the Deer Park Saturday night, where Reverie rounds off the week Sunday evening.

If that does not tickle your fancy, maybe the Scottish Games will. Saturday at Fair Hill Grounds off Route 273, you can watch a hodgepodge of Scottish activities including an event called the Caber Toss, where vicious men in long skirts flip 20-foot telephone poles. The admission is $6, and the event runs from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Perhaps a trip to Josephine Gardens at Brandywine Park in Wilmington seems apropos. Sunday, over 40 of the area's top restaurants including Klondike Kate's, set up booths and sell samples of their finest cuisine, as they participate in the first annual Brandywine Restaurant Festival.

Local groups like Johnny Neel and the Melton Brothers will perform throughout the day. The admission is free, and the fiesta begins at 11 a.m.

Another alternative to books and slide rules is "The Treasure Hunt Loop" tonight in Wilmington. For a single $2 cover, you can get a clue at all the participating nightclubs that entitles you to guess where the treasure might be hidden. The treasure is a Sony Watchman hand-held television set and the bands are: The Girlfriends at Oscar's, The Movies at The Haberdashery, The Chex at The Barn Door and The Young Rumblers plus The MIBs at C.J. Chips.

e dances! He sings! He shouts! And he gets his whole class to follow along.

This is a professor? Well, in a sense. He's John Mannion, alias "Professor John," and during his "class" Thursday nights at the Down Under, he wll give you his full attention.

Colored lights flash, the "class" dances wildly, and everyone has fun as they follow the instructions of their "professor." There is never an attendance problem, and no one even thinks of cheating.

"Okay, everyone follow along," Professor John yells into the microphone. "Little Willie, Willie won't-clap-go home!"

Mannion, from Bel Air, Md., is a senior communications major with a business minor. He began working for the campus radio station, WXDR, and then started a disc jockey business during his sophomore year.

Two months ago, he convinced the Down Under general manager, Fred Garyantes, that he had something valuable to offer.

The Down Under was dead on Thursday nights, and that's why I went there," Mannion said. "I saw a great opportunity and went after

"I like to be referred to as an entertainer-I'm not there just to bring the music." Instead, he tries to promote an energetic and fun personality, so people will come out to see the DJ.

Garyantes thinks Mannion has succeeded. "The key ingredient for an entertainer-is the ability to relate to the audi-ence," he said. I think John Mannion does that extremely well. He's an artist, and we appreciate him for that."

When Mannion works, he goes wild with his crowd. He said people often assume he is "wasted" and offer to buy him drinks.

'Sometimes if I get thirsty, I'll ask for a glass of water and people think it's so funny that they start cracking up and say, 'Ahh that's pretty good, yeah-water!' Another assumption people tend to make, he said, is that being a DJ is a great way to pick up women.

"It may not hurt," he said with a blushing smile. "What am I gonna do, put on a loong tape or something?"

Although Mannion does have fun while DJ'ing, he stressed that it is his business, and he earns enough money that it could be a way to make a temporary living upon graduation.

"It was really interesting starting my own business while still in college," he noted, with his continuous hand movements punctuating his speech. "I've had to learn everything from the technical end to public relations and marketing."

After he finishes his summer disc jockey job at Maloney's Tavern in Margate, N.J., Mannion plans to go to Los Angeles to try to break into the entertainment field.

"There are a lot of opportunities out there," he said. "If you're really serious about entertainment, you can't stay in Bel Air, Maryland!"

Looking in the mirror

valuable Review space as a soapbox for my diatribe against popular music (circa 1984), l will attempt to suppress my critic's ego and be honest with you in my last music col

With the Comateen's funky "Get Off My Case" dub jerk ing from my speakers, I find it difficult to concern mysell with a stinging discourse or the lack of virtues in heavy metal music, the unimaginativeness of radio station programmers, the reasons why black artists seemingly produce hellacious singles and mediocre LPs, or how MTV has riddled popular music with endless commerciality. Who really cares?

As music columnist, I felt that it was my responsibility to critically appraise records on a weekly basis and offer my impressions of them. Throughout this sometimes hectic but always fascinatin process, I feel that I succeed ed in giving fair assessments of what amounted to a limited sampling of pop records. However, in retrospect, I do feel that I often missed the point: the purpose of music is to entertain.

ometimes, too much insightfulness and analysis dull spontaneous gratification music offers. Instead of responding emotively, we (read: critics) tend to res pond cerebrally, weighing music on a merit scale. It's perfectly natural to discus the lyrical and/or musical significance of a particular record, as long as finding the most satisfying musical experience is our goal. And regardless of a riff her there, the attraction of music lies in its initial appeal and lasting effect.

As a music critic, I've learned something. In this era of electrofunk, technopop, rockabilly, nouveau rock et al., the specific boundaries of music are evaporating, and rather than attempt to define and classify these dissipa-tions, I've begun to accept them for what they're worth

I'm still hoping to pursue a career critiquing music. Hopefully, I'll enjoy it too.
