

A black and white photograph of a still life arrangement. In the upper left, a basket is filled with various vegetables, including cauliflower, onions, and carrots. To the right of the basket is a piece of fabric with a geometric, woven pattern. In the foreground, a large spool of thread sits on the left, with a needle resting on it. To the right of the spool are two buttons and a small container. The word "Home" is written in a cursive font on a white, scalloped-edge tag in the upper left, and the word "Economics" is written in a similar font on a white, scalloped-edge tag in the lower right.

B. Hoosick Falls, New York. New York State for Teachers S.B. in Home Economics, master's degree at Teachers C., Columbia U.; graduate work Cornell U. and U. of Tennessee; Omicron Nu, Home Economics Honor Society; Phi Kappa Phi, American Association of University Professors, American Association of University Women, American Home Economics Association, National Education Association, and the American Vocational Association.

DEAN AMY REXTREW

The School of Home Economics is attempting to reach the three objectives most girls have for their lives: (1) a broad cultural education which will fit them for living in the world today, (2) marriage and the ability to make that marriage successful, and (3) a professional career which is interesting and socially significant.

To insure the first purpose, courses in English, history, economics, sociology, fine arts, and the sciences are required of all Home Economics students, making up fifty per cent of their programs.

For the second, since over 90 percent of the Home Economics students marry within five years after they leave college, they need to have a knowledge of food and nutrition; to understand the psychology of family relationships; to be aware of the latest developments in textiles, clothing, and consumer buying; to have an understanding of child psychology and child development; and above all to recognize that homemaking can be the most satisfying and challenging of the professions.

For the career objective, no other college course offers its graduates such a range of interesting occupations. Here at Delaware, we have four majors—

1. General, which prepares teachers, home demonstration agents, 4-H Club agents, and homemakers.
2. Child Development, which prepares for Nursery School work.

3. Foods and Nutrition, leading to dietetics, food service of all kinds, food research, home service with public utilities, etc.
4. Textiles and Clothing, giving foundation courses for further work in textiles, positions as fashion advisers, and in merchandising.

We have never been able to fill the demand for our graduates so any girl who enrolls in Home Economics is practically assured of a position.

Many courses are open to all students in the University as electives. Child Development, Home Management, and Nutrition are recommended especially for students who intend going into social service; for the elementary education student, we recommend Child Development and Nutrition; for any student who includes marriage in his or her life plan, we urge courses in Family Relationships, Consumer Buying, Home Management, and Child Development. Any of these courses count toward the B.A. degree. Laboratory courses in food and clothing are valuable for those who wish to learn skills.

Graduate work in Home Economics is offered in the summer sessions and it is possible for a Home Economics student to earn her master's degree by summer work. A minor is chosen from Education, Sociology, Economics, Fine Arts, or one of the sciences.

LIBRARY

H. Kraemer

WILLIAM D. LEWIS
Librarian

It is so far from being true that the greatness of any library depends upon the size of its printed collection that a strong case could be made for the claim that its goodness is proportional to the things it possesses which are not in the truest sense manifestations of the printer's art. There were great libraries before Gutenberg; there are great libraries today in which not only the most costly but the most significant material dates from before the invention of printing; and there are every year more libraries in which the standard book, impressed from moveable types or linotype slugs, has given place to other media of communication. It is not without purpose that the proponents of visual and audio and tactile education have posted without rest and when the smoke and heat and confusion, generated by the imposition of a new organ upon an old one has cleared, it is not unlikely that we shall find not scars only, but marks of honor and things of beauty.

In the meantime, however, the university library—your library—is typical of the time. And what makes a library typical of our time?

We have, in the first place, a goodly book collection—some 135,000 to be more or less exact, and we have circulated, on rare occasions and under unusual circumstances to be sure, up to 380 in a single day. But we are not proud or praiseworthy on account of our statistics; nor do those statistics tell very much of the story. Many of our best readers rarely withdraw a book from the library, having learned the technique of research and reference, and being finely aware of the advantage the collection has as a whole over any part of it which may be carried away to the somewhat bare accommodation of even the most bookish room on the campus. Others have discovered the human resources of the library; have learned that not even the best of the catalogs, indexes, guides and bibliographies can always do alone or together what they can be made to do in the hands of the trained and skillful assistant; and they have learned, too, that the assistant who fails is, like the book that fails, not the only assistant or the only book and that neither need by that token to be given up as worthless and never asked again. There are students, too, who know that the library does not stop where the gates and counters seem to stop them, but goes on, not to books only, but to maps, manuscripts, pictures, recordings and microfilm; who have learned that they must only make their need and their sincerity known to come into very close contact with old, unusual and precious material of which the reserve addict knows nothing.

What is our aspiration: What star?

First, that everyone shall use, and use often, the rich, if sometimes limited collection, and then that they shall use it courageously and well; that every Freshman shall be given the resourcefulness ordinarily apparent in unusual upper classmen who, knowing what they want, recognize the need for applying at a level where they will be understood and strike out with the certainty of being served. In this quarter the veteran is spoiling us. He is back, full of a kind of know-how which, while it sometimes tries our resources, never fails to please. He reminds us that we were getting old; that we had almost forgotten our youthful aspiration toward a race of philobibliosophers.
