FLLT 490 (capstone seminar) One World: Cinematic Perspectives on Global Diversity; FLLT 495 (capstone seminar) One World: Literary Perspectives on Global Diversity

The capstone course will round out the concentration curriculum by engaging senior foreign languages and literatures majors in a learning experience that is at once synthetic, reflective, creative, and integrative. To this end, students will apply their knowledge of diverse languages, literatures, and the cultures that produced them to work independently and collaboratively in critically solving problems and addressing issues deriving from the diversity of cultures and the reality of a global community or humanity.

Explain, when appropriate, how this new/revised curriculum supports the 10 goals of undergraduate education: <http://www.ugs.udel.edu/gened/>

These courses will comprise a synthetic, reflective analysis of international films/works of literature and the various ethical, social, and political issues they address. The courses will comprise synthetic, critical analysis of the films or literary works in question. Synthetic analysis will take the form both of classroom discussion and the composition of written responses (short papers and other written exercises: e.g. double entry journal) to a series of reflective questions posed (or problems devised) by the instructor necessitating students' engagement with the various situations portrayed in the works. In this endeavor, students will draw on their prior knowledge, on commentary provided by the instructor in class by way of introducing each work, and on individual and/or group research.

Identify other units affected by the proposed changes:
