THE SCHOOL OF ARTS AND SCIENCE

The School of Arts and Science offers instruction in the humanities, the social sciences, and the natural and physical sciences. In these fields of knowledge, it provides curricula and majors for students enrolled in the School of Arts and Science and courses required by other schools of the University. Students may elect to become candidates for the degree of Bachelor of Arts or the degree of Bachelor of Science. The degree of Bachelor of Arts is awarded to those who complete a broad course of study designed to provide a liberal education; the degree of Bachelor of Science is available to students who follow specialized curricula in chemistry, physics, business administration, and medical technology.

Research is an essential part of the program of the School of Arts and Science. Projects are carried on by individuals, by departments, and co-operatively among departments. An opportunity is afforded students through independent study in their senior year to gain experience by participating in research. In this way they are able to apply the knowledge gained in the classroom and to develop initiative and resourcefulness.

Underlying the curriculum of the School of Arts and Science is the purpose of a liberal education, and the belief that in such an education the primary concern is the development of the individual. More important than the specific content of courses is the stimulus that they offer to the student's power of reason and judgment and to the growth of his sense of values. Only by keeping this aim uppermost can we educate men and women who will be effective individuals and useful citizens.

SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

The main purpose of the School of Education is to extend the liberal and humanistic disciplines by applying them to the art of teaching. The School aims to integrate the major and minor fields of the student, together with his electives, and to bring this integration to bear upon the teaching process. Toward this end the School has created two general education courses for the preparation of its future teachers: Human Growth and Development and Community Forces and Resources. The first enlists psychology, physiology, anthropology, and sociology in the study of human behavior; the second shows how schools are related to the other institutions of democracy, and how both the historical tradition of the American school and conflicting philosophies of education determine its position in present society.

The School of Education includes a Reading Clinic, a Play Therapy Division, a Psychological Services Center, a Graduate Division, an In-Service Program, a PTA consultant, and a Materials Center. Its enrollment, standing at present at 400, has been increasing steadily, despite the emergency. All its various departments are ever at the disposal of the entire Delaware community, which the School of Education feels to be its first duty to serve.

Acting Dean of Engineering

The School of Engineering, working in close cooperation with industry, aims to prepare its students for the engineering profession, to familiarize them with the economic and social aspects of engineering progress, and to assist them in becoming more useful citizens. These aims are accomplished through courses of both a theoretical and practical nature, which serve to coordinate the scientific, industrial, technical, social, and economic aspects of human endeavor and involve the four major fields of chemical, civil, electrical, and mechanical engineering.

Each of these curricula is built on a foundation of mathematics and physical science, and includes considerable practice in the laboratories, as well as in the class room. The various curricula are motivated by practical problems which students solve by methods similar to those employed by practising engineers.

Research activities of interest to the State of Delaware, local and national industry, and to the various agencies of the United States Government, are being carried out on a fundamental level in such fields as heat transfer, highways, petroleum processing, and jet propulsion. This fundamental research activity serves to stimulate the growth of the various departments concerned and thereby provides greater opportunity for both the undergraduate and graduate students.

Lectures by visiting engineers, field trips, films on engineering subjects, and panel discussions of student problems are encouraged and provide contacts with contemporary industrial progress.

Graduate programs leading to the Master's degree are offered by the four major departments. In addition, the department of chemical engineering offers graduate work leading to the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

The interests of the people of the State of Delaware are met by the offerings of the Extension Division through which engineering courses, of both a theoretical and practical nature, are offered at the Extension centers in the four major engineering curricula. Courses are offered at both an undergraduate and graduate level to be of maximum service to the people of Delaware.

SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

Our Land-Grant Colleges of which the University of Delaware School of Agriculture is a member institution are beamed toward improving agriculture and life on the farm. Improving and conserving agriculture helps preserve our national security; for a prosperous agriculture contributes to the welfare of the nation.

Agriculture is a complicated business. It is a challenge, and to meet that challenge you must be prepared. The School of Agriculture offers seven major courses of study in preparing you to meet the challenge. Students may select a major in Agricultural Economics, Agricultural Education in cooperation with the School of Education, Agronomy, Animal Industry, Entomology-Plant Pathology, Horticulture, and Poultry Industry. The training in agriculture is closely related to practical agriculture through experiences on the farm and technical agriculture through the scientific and technical courses offered by the School.

As the nation's agriculture moves into the second half of the twentieth century, unknown conditions and unknown problems will challenge your ability. War and the threats of war will upset our national equilibrium, but we must strive to keep a balance between the plow shares and the swords. We must preserve our agriculture, our way of life, and our national security.

Young men in the college classrooms and on the farm are continually preparing to meet the ever-changing challenge of preserving our agriculture. This type of preparation through the college halls and on the farm will help keep our equilibrium.

SCHOOL OF HOME ECONOMICS

The School of Home Economics at Delaware has this year achieved the greatest success since its initial appearance here on our campus. Not only was there a larger Freshman class majoring in Home Economics than ever before, but many more non-majors have begun to take advantage of the courses offered by the School. During the past five years the number of home economics majors has increased about one hundred and fifty per cent; this number emphasizes the great need of the School for additional facilities.

The courses which the School of Home Economics offers are valuable to students because of their twofold purpose. These courses prepare students for both a career and the managing of a home. Although the number of home economics students has increased enormously, the need for home economists is by no means satisfied. The University is able to fill only thirty-five per cent of the requests for Home Economics graduates which are received.

The vast opportunities offered to home economists have prompted many to choose the field; but in order to prepare these people, modern facilities are needed. Unfortunately our School of Home Economics is now suffering greatly from a lack of space and equipment. Plans for a new building to house the Schools of Home Economics and Education have been drawn up. The materialization of this building would serve to satisfy the demands upon the School by its large enrollment and to offer greater opportunities for research and service to the state.

It is to be hoped that the great interest shown by students during the past year will continue and that the School of Home Economics will be able to offer its courses to all students of the University.
