Senior Class History

On the fifteenth day of September, A. D. 1913, fifty-one promising future candidates for the presidency of these United States took the first big step of their lives by matriculating at Old Delaware ("matriculating" wasn't in our vocabulary then; you see we really have learned something). These fifty-one fellows represented four States and one federal district, and each one was determined to uphold the name of his mother state.

We lost both football and basketball games to our natural enemy, and enjoyed the satisfaction of nearly winning our rush. With baseball it was quite different; we sent the dreaded Sophs down to ignoble defeat, only to be humbled ourselves by the dignified Seniors. Our relay team hung up a new class record, helping us all to think that '17 had contributed something to the year's athletics.

Our Freshman banquet was the event of the year. It really did more towards getting the fellows acquainted than anything had done before.

By September, 1914, the class had shrunk to half its entrance size. Some of the fellows had learned enough in one year; some had become millionaires during the summer and couldn't afford to come back; others had various reasons just as good. With this handful we tried to show the Freshmen how things should be done. We showed them how to play baseball; most of the other events went to the First-Year men.

When September, 1915, rolled around, our ranks had not depleted appreciably. For many, this was the hardest year. This was especially true of the engineers, the Arts and Science men never having any hard year, let alone hardest. However, most of us managed to answer to our names thruout the year. Our Prom was a novel departure from previous ones, and elicited favorable comment from all sides. The year closed with everybody looking forward to occupying the front seats in Chapel during the next year.

Our last year at Delaware opened inauspiciously. Our numbers were decreased noticeably, but what was lacking in quantity was made up in quality. A pall was cast over our class because of the absence of one who had always been a leader in our class affairs, but who, by reason of misfortune, would never join with us again.

Several of our boys were on the Mexican border, participating in the Great War with Villa. At the time of writing these fellows are still "watchfully waiting" for a truce. It is hard to imagine whether or no our "soldiers" will be back in time to graduate with the greatest class since "'96."

Now, on the eve of graduation it is interesting to look back over the past four years. We entered thinking we knew it all; as Sophs, we knew that we were wise; as Juniors, we began to have our doubts; and as Seniors, we realize what there is to be learned.

Tom Wilson

THOMAS RICKARDS WILSON, JR.

The same qualities of courage, skill, and endurance with which "Tom" Wilson made good on the athletic field and in college life, have enabled him to make good in the harder test of accident and long illness. The world can see now the traits which we admired in him as guard in football and basketball, as Captain of Company A, as student and true-hearted friend. On Delaware's roll of achievement, we would place high the spirit with which "Tom" "plays the game."
