Asparagus Pamphlet Prepared By Brusher

A new mimeo circular, titled as Horticulture Pamphlet No. 1, has been prepared by E. P. Brusher, assistant horticulturist at the Delaware Agricultural Experiment Station. Title of the pamphlet is "Lime and Fertilizer Requirements for Asparagus." In the four-page pamphlet, Brusher says that "to produce high quality, large spears of asparagus for a period of eight weeks and the vim of top growth necessary for the root system to store plant food for the following season, enormous quantities of fertilizer are required. To a great extent, the quality of asparagus depends upon the rapidity of growth. Therefore, a constant supply of quickly-available nutrients should be accessible throughout the entire growing season."

CROPLAND INCREASE IN 1940

Report Given On Delaware Farm Land

Delaware farmers had more cropland in the Agricultural Conservation Program during 1940 than in previous years. Of the State's 580,000 acres of cropland, 92 per cent was covered by participating farmers' applications. This compared with 91.8 per cent in 1939, 83.2 per cent in 1938, 64.4 per cent in 1937, and 46.9 per cent in 1936.

Although the ACP year lasts only 10 months, omitting the two important months of September and October, the 8022 farms in the program seeded a total of 105,420 acres of soil-improving legume crops which included 19,962 acres of winter legumes. Winter legumes seeded in September and October of 1940 will be reported under the 1941 program.

Use of lime on Delaware farms increased during the 10 months of 1940 to 39,459 tons as compared with the twelve-month period in 1939 of 23,251 tons, and 25,100 tons in 1938, 19,238 tons in 1937, and 2969 tons in 1936. Despite the short year and reduction in the units credit for certain farm practices, the 8022 farms earned 83.5 per cent of their soil-building goal in 1940.

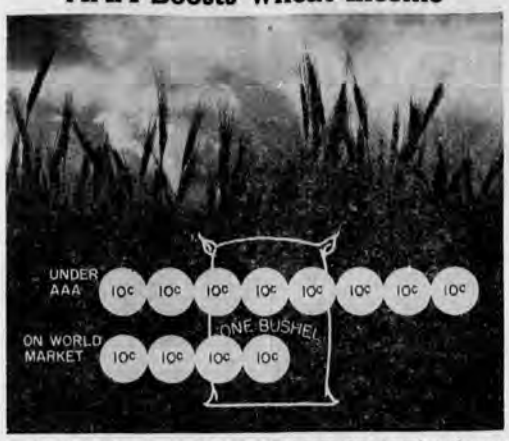
AAA Boosts Wheat Income



The U. S. Department of Agriculture says that American farmers who cooperated in the 1940 AAA program received a net return of nearly 80 cents a bushel for their wheat. Compared with a probable return of 40 cents a bushel or less had they been dependent entirely upon the world market. The national farm program aids wheat growers with crop loans, parity and conservation payments, crop insurance, and an export program.

POULTRY BUSINESS BOOMING

Poultry House Construction Now Underway

A building boom is on in Delaware's poultry industry where poultry house construction has been going on at a rapid pace during the past six months. And it looks as though the construction boom will continue. H. L. Richardson, poultry specialist for the Delaware Agricultural Extension Service, reports estimates that have placed the capacity of the new broiler houses at from one to two million birds.

Richardson claims that it is on the farms where hatching eggs are being produced that some of the better poultry houses are now being constructed. He feels that the expansion in housing facilities for birds producing hatching eggs is well-founded because the rapidly-growing broiler industry will force greatly-increased demands for chicks upon hatcheries. More and better houses in which hatching eggs can be produced on Delaware farms will mean that the hatcheryman can obtain quality eggs practically at his back door. Richardson reveals that three, good-sized Delaware hatcheries are already obtaining their eggs locally. Five or six years ago, practically all of the eggs going to Delaware hatcheries were from out-of-state producers.

Here are some of the places where interested poultrymen can look over new poultry houses of various types: The farm of E. W. Phillips, just off of Route 13, two miles north of Odessa; J. W. MacLucas has a new poultry house at the northwest edge of Smyrna; Warren McGee's farm, one mile west of Greenwood; Herman Ockles' farm, one miles below Blades just east of Route 13; Paul Kenney poultry farm, near Columbia; Walter Conway, in Concord; Melvin and William Prettyman, at Harbeson, and Dave Greene's new double-decker house is on his farm two miles north of Milford, just off Route 113 on the Thompsonville road.

Richardson urges poultrymen visiting these poultry houses to be careful about the possible spread of poultry ailments from one farm to another.

A Colbert, Okla., church recently announced that $5 in cash would be given to anyone who could go to sleep during a revival service. Nobody collected.

Newark, Delaware, Thursday, March 13, 1941

MERCHANDISE SHOW ASSURED

Newark's fourth annual Merchandise Show is now assured. It will be held in the State Armory, located at Delaware Avenue and Academy streets, each afternoon and evening of April 3, 4 and 5.

Originated and sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce four years ago, the annual Merchandise Show has become one of the most popular events staged here each year. It draws literally thousands of visitors into town and plays to a capacity crowd each session.

Merchants and manufacturers cooperate by showing their products to the public who are given this opportunity to view new styles, models and latest designs.

Some confusion existed as to whether or not the Armory would be available this year due to the mobilization of the National Guard Unit but it has all been straightened out—the Armory has been obtained and a number of merchants have already contracted for floor space.

All indications point to another tremendously successful show. The dates have been set a month later this year in the hope of striking more favorable weather than has prevailed the past two years when attendance was cut by heavy wind, rain and snow storms.

Local merchants and manufacturers are urged to participate in this affair and avail themselves of booths while choice selections are still available. Interested parties should contact George Jackson or D. A. McClintock — or, a phone call to 4941 will do the trick.

Some of the outstanding exhibits will include 1941 automobile displays, the Delaware Power & Light Company's Cooking Schools each afternoon for ladies of the community, Continental-Diamond and National Vulcanized Fibre Company booths and many, many more.

Not only will all admissions be free but prizes will be given at each session. Last year prizes were awarded each hour and many a person went home happier and wealthier for his visit. It is again planned to have industrial arts and home economics displays in the balcony showing the work done by children of the public school system.

The only thing that will be lacking is the display of Battery E. which attracted many visitors last year.

So, get on the band wagon. Make your plans now to attend each session of the Merchandise Show.

SUNDAY IN NEWARK

Recent repeal of Delaware's ancient 'Blue Laws' will undoubtedly find favor with most residents of Newark largely because they have become ridiculously outmoded and no real need exists for their enforcement in our community.

Newark has long been a community of peace and quiet on the Sabbath and no flagrant violations of the day have been noticed. In this we are, perhaps, more fortunate than our metropolitan, neighboring cities where movies, bowling alleys, skating rinks and other unbecoming enterprises will flourish on Sunday if legally permitted.

The people of Newark neither seek nor desire this type of Sunday activities. They are content to observe the day resting and worshiping. We are confident these methods of observing the Sabbath, in Newark at least, will continue in their present status, unquestioned.

The quiet and contentment of a peaceful day of rest at the end of the week is just one of the things that go towards making Newark one of the nicest and best places in these United States to live in. We hope it never changes its Sabbath attitude and observances.

The so-called 'blue laws' were entirely too drastic for this twentieth century and we are in accord with their repeal. We also believe that, in this day and age, the service station, the drug store and the news-stand are considered necessities by most of us. We fail to see where their patronage is harmful or wrong.

We feel that repeal was undoubtedly the will of the majority. But, we are indeed happy that Sunday in Newark will go on, unaffected, in the same quiet, serene manner it has in years past.

BILL OF RIGHTS WEEK

Under authority of an act passed last year by the New York legislature, that state has just celebrated Bill of Rights Week, the object of which is to emphasize the "purpose, meaning and importance of the Bill of Rights," particularly in the education of children.

The week was marked by patriotic rallies by many school, church and civic organizations, with suitable exercises in which the liberties guaranteed by the first ten amendments to the Constitution were contrasted with the almost complete absence of freedom in totalitarian countries.

It is well that the youth of America should be taught to understand and appreciate these liberties, especially at such a time as the present, when subversive elements of our population are seeking to undermine and destroy our most cherished institutions.

The United States is honeycombed with organizations sponsored by Nazis, Fascists and Communists and their sympathizers, who spread their poisonous doctrines by every possible means, as has been shown by the revelations of the Dies committee.

Educational efforts such as those of Bill of Rights Week should be helpful in keeping American youth from being influenced by subversive groups.

"LITTLE PITCHERS"

Parents and other adults enjoy reminiscing concerning their own childhood and recounting the funny capers and daring pranks which they used to play. Elderly people are particularly prone to do this if some of their companions of long ago are present and the conversation reverts to their childhood. They usually begin something like this: "Do you remember——?" and then they are off. If young children are present, they are entranced by the amusing tales and astonished that their elders ever did such things as they are now relating.

As a rule, the children have been given to understand, up to the present time, that their parents and other relatives were exceptionally good boys and girls—meek little creatures who always did just what they were told and could be depended upon to do the right thing at all times. But now they are hearing an entirely different story and, in contrast, their own daring deeds are tame.

Just what the effect of this will be on the listening youngsters is not always predictable. For example, after Johnny had heard his father tell of "high old times" he and some of the other boys used to have, Johnny wanted to go and do likewise, and some of his attempts were destructive and even dangerous.

On a certain Hallowe'en, among other pranks, Johnny and his companions stretched a stout cord across a roadway along which one or more persons were likely to pass. The minister of the little church at the corner was the victim. Not looking for any such barrier, this man—loved by adults and children, alike—was thrown headlong, sustaining physical injuries that were lifelong in their unfortunate consequences.

If mischievous reminiscences are to be related for the enjoyment of those who were boys or girls of the past, it is always best not to do it within the hearing of children. More often than not, it is time that throws a glamour about those pranks; usually it did not exist when they were played, and certainly their daring nature rarely loses anything in the telling. Those relating the stories usually enjoy dressing them up to make them sound as amusing as possible. Here again the children are likely to get an exaggerated idea of what actually happened and to feel that if their parents, who are now highly respected, did these things, it must be all right for them to do similar ones.

Further than that, when parents a little later find it necessary to reprimand their children for particularly undesirable behavior, the boys and girls are more than likely to say, to themselves at least, something of this sort: "Oh, so you are scolding me for a little thing like this, when you used to do a great deal worse yourself. It isn't fair! When I grow up, I want to have funny things to talk about with those I played with when I was little."

In this way, it may be that many parents are today responsible for much of the roistering conduct of children who are out with the intention merely of having a harmless good time.

"Little pitchers" always have had and probably always will have "big ears". Let us not forget that. The children may hear more and remember more and misconstrue more than we think possible. So it is wise to take no chances.

GLASSTONE TO SPEAK THURSDAY

FOOD for THOUGHT

Charlotte Spencer,

Below the safety line—because some of us don't care enough. We must be roused.

Below the safety line means this: Bodies that tire too easily, bodies with minds that are slow to think, bodies too weak to fight disease.

Meals that are ample, meals that are well balanced, meals that taste good, meals that provide an abundance of protective foods—these breed strength.

This is a job for a nation of people and in it there is work for you.

You can get a radio market news service started so household buyers will know what foods are good buys.

You can see that every child has at least one well balanced meal each day—the school lunch.

You can learn, if you have land, how to grow the foods you cannot buy, preserve the foods you cannot immediately use, and plan for balanced meals throughout the year.

You can know what your local, state, and national governments are doing to help get safe meals to more people.

If this condensed version of the Food and National Defense issue of Consumers Guide interests you, send five cents, not stamps, to the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., for your own copy to read and to study.

More Discussion . . .

A much-discussed subject these days is "When should quail be liberated, spring or fall?", and I suppose it will be discussed on until the end of time or the end of the game little brown bomber, the Bob White Quail.

Either spring or fall is the proper time for liberating, with certain restrictions. I have no doubt but what quail will thrive and multiply if liberated in early spring here in Delaware, after March 15th. The restrictions mentioned above are proper habitat, food water, protection from vermine and other quail. Proper habitat can be found very easily here in Delaware, because the correct place to liberate a number of birds is some locality where birds have been shot or have disappeared for some unknown reason. Here birds have thrived in the past, and they should thrive again, provided soil erosion, habitation or fire has not crowded them out. Proper food — look for seed bearing plants, such as lespedeza, beggar lice, black berries and similar seed and fruit bearing plants; a near-by stream or brook is also on asset. Protection from vermin—do your liberating in some well covered terrain, where the birds might take up housekeeping without rambling around looking for proper cover. I have known of cases where birds were liberated in barnyards and here they remained until devoured by the family cat. I can't be brought to believe that one of our state wardens would do such a thing today, but if he should, he should be fired on the spot, with no questions asked. I honestly think and believe that the wardens should take the local sportsman into their confidence whenever liberating quail and rabbits, inasmuch as they know more about local game conditions than any of our state officers. One of the reasons for this statement is that pen-reared birds should not be liberated closer than one-quarter of a mile of a native covey, because if a covey of pen-reared birds go into a local native covey none of the liberated birds will ever see the next sun rise, because the native birds will kill every one and do a good and quick job of it.

Vermin Control . . .

The control of vermin is in the hands of the sportsmen. Put your birds in good cover with plenty of food, both ground grain and natural food, and do all in your power to keep out hawks, stray house cats and other predators, at least until the quail get adjusted to their new environment. I do think that quail should not be liberated before March 15th, in the spring.

Fall liberation offers an entirely different group of problems. Most of the big game keepers in the southern quail belt prefer to liberate eight to ten week old birds in mid-August or early September. They will invariably liberate a clutch of young birds with a native cock that has been trapped the previous year. They mate their pen-reared hens with trapped native cock birds. This strengthens the strain and they are then used to take care of clutches of young birds in the late summer of the same year. These old birds know how to scrape up a livelihood the natural way and soon impart this knowledge to their young charges. There is an abundance of food in late August and early September, and if the grounds on which these birds are protected from shooting the first year, I am thoroughly convinced that fall liberation is far superior to spring liberation.

Here in Delaware, with conditions such as we find them, spring liberation is most likely the best, but the rules outlined above should be followed to the letter and the sportsmen can do more about this than all the legislation and executive supervision, by our commission, they can possibly put into effect. If you have a good spot for quail in your locality where you know a covey is no more, discuss it with your warden and if he gets birds, which he most assuredly will, offer your assistance in liberating, and profit by the suggestions listed above. Will see you next week.

Fruit Fertilizers Suggested By Greve

Nitrogen fertilizers—sulphate of ammonia, nitrate of soda and cyanamid—give the best results by way of apple and peach tree growth, says Dr. E. W. Greve, research horticulturist at the Delaware Agricultural Experiment Station. Since nitrate of soda leaches through the soil rapidly, it's best to apply this fertilizer from two to three weeks before the trees start to bloom. Sulphate of ammonia is distributed about a week earlier than the nitrate of soda, or about a month before the blossoms appear. Cyanamid is applied in the fall.

Greve suggests about two pounds of fertilizer for an eight-year-old tree, while a 20-year-old tree gets about five pounds, with trees of other ages receiving proportionate amounts. The nitrogen fertilizers will do the most good when spread in a circle under the trees, covering the ground from a foot out from the trunk to about three feet beyond the spread of the branches.

TEN-GAME BASEBALL CARD IS LISTED FOR JACKET TOSSERS; MATERIAL SCARCE

Season To Open On April 10 With A. I. duPont; Frank Dunn, Ace Hurler In 1940 To Return For Duty; Five Varsity Men Back

Ten games, five of which will be played on the local diamond, have been scheduled for the Newark High School baseball team, according to the slate released yesterday. The season will get underway on Thursday, April 10, when the Yellowjackets will play host to A. I. duPont.

Other games on the card are: Thursday, April 24—P. S. duPont, home; Tuesday, April 29—Wilmington, home; Friday, May 2—Smyrna, home; Tuesday, May 6—P. S. duPont, away; Friday, May 9—Smyrna, away; Wednesday, May 14—A. I. duPont, away; Friday, May 16—New Castle, away; Friday, May 23—Wilmington, away; Friday, May 30—New Castle, home. One or two games are also pending with the University of Delaware junior varsity.

Six lettermen, headed by Pitcher Frank Dunn, will form the nucleus for this year's Jacket diamond contingent which, in 1940, marked up seven victories against only three defeats under the tutilege of Coach Ralph (Irish) O'Connell.

Dunn, who figured prominently in the team's success, turned in four of the seven conquests while Bob McCormick, another letterman, was credited with three conquests. Other varsity men expected to report are: Charlie Weldin, third base; Albert Thorpe, pitcher and shortstop; Henry Brooks, outfielder, and Albert (Ace) Aiken, second base.

Other men who saw some action last season who will undoubtedly turn out for the first drill are: Charlie Riley, Octavio Cataldi, and Paul Cochran, outfielders; Roy Dunsmore, infield, and George Schaen, catcher. More than 20 other candidates are expected to report for the first drill which is tentatively scheduled for the last week in March.

In 1940, the local diamondmen dropped decisions only to the Delaware junior varsity, Conrad, and P. S. duPont. The latter team was downed in a return engagement while victories were also turned in over Wilmington High School (2), New Castle (2), and Smyrna (2).

JOHNSTON MEASURE GAINING

Rural Citizens Against Merger Of Funds, Daniel

There is increasing evidence in the legislative halls that rural Delaware citizens are going to demand the passage of House Bill 45, introduced by Representative William D. Johnston. This measure, according to H. V. Daniel, secretary, Associated Petroleum Industries of Delaware, would amend the "One-Fund Merger Act" by providing that the Highway Fund be kept out of the General Fund.

"Citizens of rural Delaware, in particular the farm groups, are keenly aware that unless the amendment is passed that rural highways may suffer substantially as the 'One-Fund Merger Act' was passed for the primary purpose of using a portion of motor fund revenues for general fund purposes," Mr. Daniel declared.

"Good roads, properly maintained, mean everything to Delaware's all-important system of agriculture. Agriculture thrives in this state only when farm products can be rushed to profitable markets in motor trucks. If lack of funds would seriously impair the safety and the usability of farm-to-market highways, the loss of revenue involved by the partial stoppage of this essential transportation system would work a grave hardship on rural Delaware. Should transportation costs increase beyond reason, or, should highway conditions delay the prompt shipment of Delaware's produce to market, other states would instantly take advantage of the situation and great difficulty might be encountered in regaining these markets.

"Rural citizens of the state are showing a disposition to make a strong and united effort for the passage of the Johnston amendment. Their prosperity and a heavy investment depend on the reception this amendment will be given by legislators. The entire future of Delaware farm owners may hinge on this one measure."

With Apologies . . .

Due to mechanical difficulties which kept the linotype machine idle for almost two days this week, it was necessary to omit our regular columns of league results from the American Legion Bowling Alley.

The editor regrets this omission and trusts that no one is being deprive of publicity for a "300" game he might have rolled last week.

Quality Of Yield Traced To Crop Seed By Watkins

Crop seed," says Dr. James M. Wat- of the agronomy department at Delaware Agricultural Experiment tion, "has a whole lot to do with amount and quality of crop yields." HOBBY PROGRAMS PLANNED

County Women Participate In National Contest

Plans for staging "Making Home a Hobby" programs in each county, previously announced for the last week of March, are now fairly complete, according to Mrs. Helen McKinley, State Chairman for American Homes. Mrs. McKinley, State home demonstration leader for the University of Delaware, is directing Delaware's participation for honors in the national "Making Home a Hobby" contest, sponsored by the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

While the speakers will be different in each county, the general plan of the three all-day meetings will be the same. To be eligible for the national contest there are two main program requirements—an exhibit of hobbies and a lecture, a demonstration or a panel discussion on each of the following topics: "My House is My Hobby," "Wise Spending is My Hobby," "My Family is My Hobby" and "Character is My Hobby." The public is invited to the county meetings.

Each county meeting will open with a demonstration on meat cutting as a guide to wise spending for this food. This demonstration will be sponsored by local butchers and will be supplemented with recipes and a talk by a nutrition expert on the best ways to cook cheaper cuts of meat.

The discussion of the house will be presented from the safety standpoint in one county, in cooperation with a representative from the Delaware Safety Council. In the other counties, speakers will emphasize the importance of comfort and attractiveness in the home.

Good family relationships will be brought out through panel discussions. The participants of the panel are being selected from different age levels and fields of work so they will represent many viewpoints. Out-of-State leaders for these panels are specialists in the field of family relationships.

For the character topic, two physicians will discuss development of a well-rounded personality and a minister will talk on the importance of religion in the home and in everyday life.

President McClintock appointed Chas. E. Grubb and C. E. Douglass to investigate the possibility of publishing an illustrated booklet of Newark in cooperation with the Town Council, and Herbert Hollingsworth, Weldon Waples and Samuel Handloff were appointed to investigate directional signs placed at the entrance of other towns throughout the state.

Garage Question Discussed

The Chamber's attention was called to the present town ordinance restricting the erection of garages within the corporate limits of the town by George F. Jackson who pointed out that the present ordinance only permits 2,650 feet of privately owned frontage on which such business may be erected. Also speaking on the same subject, Postmaster Cyrus E. Rittenhouse stated that the automotive trades industry is the largest in our community and cited figures relative to their investment, sales and annual payrolls.

Samuel Handloff outlined advantages offered by the adoption of zoning ordinances to properly regulate the rapid growth being enjoyed in the community and favored the establishment of a zoning board as the most satisfactory solution to present difficulties.

Group Favors Repeal

It was moved by C. E. Rittenhouse and seconded by Herman Handloff, "That the Newark Chamber of Commerce go on record as favoring the repeal of the ordinance now in effect restricting the erection of garages and service stations to Main Street between the B. & O. and Pomeroy Branch of the Pennsylvania R. R. tracks and favoring the establishment of town zoning ordinances."

The motion was carried, by a voice vote, with but two dissenting votes cast. Some members present did not vote. Present at the meeting were: D. A. McClintock, George Jackson, C. E. Grubb, Weldon Waples, M. Pilnick, Herbert Hollingsworth, Wm. S. Hamilton, John Hebener, George M. Haney, Abraham Hoffman, Alfred Deck, Fiore Nardo, C. E. Rittenhouse, John K. Johnston, R. T. Ware, C. E. Douglass, Samuel Handloff, Robert J. Boyd and Herman Handloff.
