

A FRIENDLY PERSON A CONSTANT SOURCE OF GOOD

Indefinable Charm Makes Such Welcome Everywhere

Two women seated across the aisle from me on a railway train were talking at a time when the train was standing still at a little railway station. One as near as I was to them could not help hearing what they were saying.

"Yes, that is true," said one of the women. "She is so friendly. Every one likes her on that account. It is a case of a very plain and always rather unfashionably dressed young woman attracting every one to her by her charming friendliness. One cannot resist it. It is an illustration of the fact that a genuinely friendly person will always be liked by others. Unaffected kindness and friendliness are winning cards in the world."

To deserve the distinction of being a "friendly person" is to prove that one is in possession of a kind of a patent of nobility, for unfailing friendliness toward every one can result only from a certain nobility of character. One never discovers this fine attribute allied with meanness and pettiness of character. I have never known a truly "friendly person" who was unpopular. I have never known one whose influence was not far-reaching, and that influence was always for good. The hand grasp of such a person is usually different from that of other people and there is an indefinable charm that has its effect on others. A young person cannot begin life for himself with a more valuable asset than that of a feeling of genuine friendliness to all he must meet in journeying down the years. It is a winning asset and an open sesame to the hearts of many. The doing of a friendly deed not only gladdens the heart of the doer, but often it inspires others to also do good deeds. The groutiest curmudgeon sometimes finds himself yielding to the influence of simple human friendliness. Often it is oil on the troubled waters of other people's lives. It is a compelling power in time of trouble and no man may know how far the influence of an act of simple friendliness may carry. Not long ago I heard a traveling man say that nearly twenty years ago he found himself in a very trying situation and a total stranger came to his relief in a very kindly and friendly way.

"From that day to this," said the traveling man, "I have never failed to do a good turn to others if the opportunity offered."

Here was an instance of one kindly deed resulting in the doing of many good deeds on the part of another. So it is that the friendly person is a constant source of good, and it is easy to believe that the name of the "truly friendly person" is written large in the great Book of God's remembrance.

BEGINNING THE DAY

Our lives are crowded with little cares,
And we worry, awake or asleep.
We are always climbing up endless stairs,
Or digging in darkest deep.

There are great ambitions, and hope awakes
As mighty tasks we begin,
There are burdens and troubles and sad mistakes
And then—our God steps in.

Should we fail to speak, or let faith grow weak
Because our plans have gone wrong?
No; we claim the clean page for a heritage,
And begin the new day with a song.

Chinese Students Help the Starving Chinese students at the University of Chicago and Northwestern University have agreed to limit the cost of their food to 65 cents a day for the next three months, the money thus saved to be sent for the relief of famine victims in China. In addition, the men will abstain from tobacco and the women from candy and motion picture shows. There are more than 150 Chinese students at the two universities.—National Republican.

Little Joe was at grandmother's house for dinner. Although fried chicken and many other mighty good things to eat were on the table, Joe did not care to eat much. Then grandmother began to coax him. One thing after another she brought to his notice. Finally she said: "Here's my home-made sugar cookies. Aren't you going to try some of them, dear?" Little Joe attempted a smile. "What's the matter," he explained, "I tried too many of them before dinner, grandma."—Indianapolis Star.

UNPUNCTUALITY AND LOAFING ON THE JOB

These Attributes Despised by Those Who Love Fair Play

This title has no reference to standard time or daylight saving, but just to filling the terms of the original contract made with the other party. You have a right to be late to a train and to miss it and thereby inconvenience nobody but yourself—the train will not mind your being late; but you hardly have a right to make an appointment with another person to be at a given place at a given time and to fail to be prompt. You steal his time and thereby wrong him.

This preamble is suggested by the aspect of a man whom we saw the other day at a street corner. He was wearing out shoe-leather in pacing back and forth under the elms, muttering anathema.

Said he, "I have tried all my life to be prompt to appointments. I have wasted a considerable portion of my life in waiting for persons who have made the appointments. Here is a case. I was urged to be here promptly at 1.15 p. m. I was here at 1.10 in order to be sure. It is now 1.45. The person is not here."

The person who had made this appointment, appeared in view. He was running and looking at his watch. He had no excuse. If any was mentioned it was futile. The appointment had been his own, the tardiness was equally his own. He was a thief of the time of the other man.

I am going to talk in platitudes; but some of these old truths require occasional reiteration. Two things get the "goat," so to speak, of any person who has any regard for fair play. One is unpunctuality and the other is loafing on the job—time-killing, watching the clock and eternal gabbling with fellow-workmen, interfering with their time and opportunity. And nine times out of ten this class of persons is the most pretentious when it comes to talking about preference.

Charles M. Schwab, who was a workman, and who rose from the ranks, as have so many persons who now manage business, said in an address before the St. George Evening Trade School, "Dr. Rainsford has spoken of the experience of a boy who quit work because his salary was not increased soon enough. I know the man for whom this boy worked and only yesterday I was sitting in his office with him, when a newsboy came in and handed him a paper for which he paid the boy. When the boy had gone, the banker said, 'Every day for more than a year that boy has come into this office punctually and delivered the paper; he has never varied a minute. I have never given him more than the price of the paper. I have studied that boy and I have determined to give him a position in this banking-house. I predict that he will rise to the head of a great banking-house.'"

Mr. Schwab further said that he had watched that boy and felt sure that he was rapidly on his way to the leadership.

I could find you stories without number of successes in life due to punctual and faithful work. In the eighties a boy was carrying water to the workers in the Carnegie Steel Works. He was noted for his punctuality. He was always on the dot. When they wanted an office-boy, his name was such that he got it. He made the same record there. He was so attentive, punctual, faithful, worked so true to the faith, that he was appointed an assistant to the superintendent, and in 1903, was the president of the Carnegie Steel Co. This is no fairy story. It has been done, over and over again.

If one should ask you the most notable characteristic of three great men, Washington, Wellington, Napoleon, it would be proper to mention punctuality. They never forgave the person who was late to appointment. Punctuality is, of course, but a negative virtue and anyone may cultivate it and follow it. The real test of a desire to succeed is in giving full measure of work in whatever task committed. Any decent employer stands ready to recognize ability and faithfulness. He is on the lookout for the men who are on the job and is seeking opportunities to forward them to places of superintendence.

Punctuality is important in social affairs as in everything else and is as essential in the domestic life as anywhere. Of course—no wife is ever late and no husband—which reminds me that I am late to dinner.—Arthur G. Staples in the Lewiston, (Me.) Journal.

Patience is the chiefest fruit of study; a man that strives to make himself different from other men by much reading gains this chiefest good, that in all fortunes he hath something to entertain and comfort himself withal.—Selden.

Delaware to Form Part of New 78th Division

The 78th Division is about to be revived as part of the organized reserves of the armed forces of the United States. The officers and troops of the new 78th Division will come from Delaware and New Jersey, it was announced by Major-General Robert L. Bullard, Commanding the 2nd Corps Area. This was decided upon subject to the approval of the Secretary of War by two Boards of Officers which met recently at the Headquarters of the 2nd Corps Area at Governor's Island.

The Board which represents Delaware and will have charge of the location of units and the selection of officers and the making of all other plans, consists of Lt. Col. Samuel G. Hartle, Asst. Chief of Staff, G-3, 2nd Corps Area, and the following officers from Delaware: Lt. Col. Thomas W. Miller, Ord. Reserve; Lt. Col. Meredith I. Samuel, Medical Reserve; Major Coulter Craig, Ord. Reserve, and Major Aikens Simmons, Coast Artillery Reserve. At the first meeting of the Board which was held recently at Governor's Island, it was decided that the 78th Division can be revived as a part of the organized reserves in Delaware and New Jersey and can carry on the traditions and attain the esprit-de-corp that marked the 78th Division of the World War and which were responsible for the gallant record achieved by that division.

The 78th Division will be organized within a short time with a full complement of officers chosen from the Reserve Officers of the Army, with special reference to former service in the command. Officers of the war division who may be living in Northern Maryland, Eastern Pennsylvania or Southern New York may be assigned to the division upon their request without regard to their place of abode. Men who served in the division during the great days of the campaign in France, when the division was making a glorious name for itself, will be asked to enroll in the division and help form companies, battalions, regiments and brigades that will be always ready as was the command that won fame in France.

Ex-members of the division who were enlisted men are especially desired as non-commissioned officers, and these appointments will be made as soon as plans are completed. The division will consist of 19,384 officers and men, and will comprise two brigades of infantry, of two regiments each, and one brigade of field artillery of two regiments, together with the necessary engineer, signal trains, and other troops.

"Carrying On" is More Than Living On

Carrying on is more than living on. Simply to exist, even under difficult circumstances, is not particularly admirable. But to exist and smile through suffering, and distribute blessing along life's common way, and even from a sickbed to set in motion the force of a gladdening example, is praiseworthy and is worth a great deal to all of us, for we commonly get much of our inspiration from the demeanor of others.

A writer said the other day: "Whenever I sit down pen in hand to tell a story I am straightway beset by innumerable aches and pains. I feel as though I were afflicted with symptoms of all the diseases. Just when I want to be my best, and when I call upon my brain to shine in its fullest and most brilliant exercise, I feel miserable and dull, and I have to fight my laggard wits to keep them on the go at all."

A famous singer said: "It is a wonder if I am doing well this evening. The orchestra is as the roar of the sea in my ears; the audience is like dancing specters upon that sea. I have the gripe and a high temperature. Only my will-power enables me to appear at all. I won't give in!" Yet that singer was doing the best work her listeners had ever heard her do.

The men who fought for us over there did not ask themselves how they felt at the zero hour when the command came to go over the top. They obeyed orders. Many came out of the carnage so badly crippled that they would have had every excuse for saying: "Let me sit and wait for death. I can do nothing. I am no good." But they would not. Having been soldiers in war, they have determined to be soldiers evermore. They are determined to fight down weakness and weariness even as they faced and overcame the foe amid the shells and poison gas.

In each of us is a battlefield, on which the spirit either surrenders and hauls down the flag in craven capitulation or stands firm and gives battle to the end, in hope of victory.

Young People Wed

St. Anne's Church, Middletown, was filled on Wednesday evening, at 7.30 o'clock, with relatives and friends of Miss Grace Elizabeth Day Brady and Mr. Jefferson Foad Pool, and many invited guests and residents to witness their wedding. The church was beautifully decorated with peonies, laurel and green plants. Rev. Percy L. Donaghy, the rector, officiated. The bride was given away by her father, Mr. Frederick Brady. She was gowned in white satin and embroidered net, with court train and veil, and carried bride roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Clara Brady, the maid of honor, wore blue organdie over pink taffeta lace with blue sash and hat. The bridesmaids, Misses Margaret H. Cochran, of East Orange, N. J., and Miss Helen D. Shorb, of Dover, wore pink organdie over green taffeta, with pink sashes and green hats. All carried pink peonies. Mr. Frank R. Pool, the groom's brother, was best man. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Pool, of McDonough. After the ceremony a reception was held at Acadia, the Brady home, attended by more than a hundred guests. The gifts to the bride were many and beautiful. Both bride and groom were formerly students at the University of Delaware and both were prominent in the social life of the students.

Poultry Expert

Here This Morning

Mr. B. S. Ellis, of Vineland, N. J., addressed the Rehabilitation students of the University of Delaware at the University of Delaware at the Assembly this morning. Mr. Ellis is an institution lecturer of considerable prominence in New Jersey. On the occasion of the visit of the students in poultry to the poultry plant at Vineland, N. J., last winter, Mr. Ellis acted as host and guide to the visitors.

In an interesting informal discourse he told of his experiences in the poultry business. He stressed particularly problems in dealing with bird life and told of experimental results in poultry raising. Love for the work; choice of location for plant, with regard to market and soil conditions, equipment and close cost calculation he defined as necessary factors in the success of the business.

Veterans of Foreign Wars to Give Dance

The Veterans of Foreign Wars are arranging for a big dance to be held in the Armory on Tuesday evening, June 21st, beginning at 8.30. Music will be furnished by a fifteen piece orchestra under the leadership of Anthony Mevla, one of the Rehabilitation students at the University of Delaware. The orchestra is composed entirely of ex-service men from the vicinity of Chester and Claymont where this talented young man lives.

Mr. Mevla is an accomplished musician. He plays the violin expertly, as well as several other stringed instruments. He is also a band leader and composer. Since his enrollment with the Rehabilitation students he has furnished music for other special occasions, notably the Rehabilitation banquet. The music for the dance will, in view of the above facts, be exceptionally fine.

Fairview Farm Bureau

Purchases Binder Twine

The Fairview Farm Bureau community met last night. Mr. Frank H. Buckingham presided. The major business before the meeting was the cooperative purchase of binder twine. Mr. Buckingham quoted a price of 13 1/4 cents per pound. An order for one ton of twine was received.

Considering the current prices it is evident that the farmers will make a worthwhile saving in the purchase of twine by this plan.

MANY EXHIBITS AT STATE FAIR THIS YEAR

Boys and Girls to Eclipse all Previous Events

Warfare, which used to lean heavily on the ironmonger, has become the affair of the chemist. The next great war, if the nations of the world are mad enough to bring one on, will be fought with tremendous explosives from the laboratory, with gases and with acids. Only a few days ago the newspapers reported that our own Chemical Warfare Service had found a poisonous liquid so terrible that three drops of it would kill any person whose skin it touched. If the Allies wish to make sure of disarming Germany they must not think that it is enough to cripple the Krupp Works at Essen if they leave the great German dye works and chemical factories intact.

For chemistry is an unmoral science that deals indifferently with matter, producing from the same stuffs things useful and things noxious. From coal tar it produces the most beautiful dyes and the most deadly gases. The Haber process for producing ammonia from the nitrogen of the air can be used to supply some of the most valuable fertilizers for the farm and some of the most frightful of high explosives. Every chemical plant, whether in Germany, in England or in the United States, is a potential arsenal.

Before the war Germany had more intelligently expanded its chemical industry than any other nation. It had a virtual monopoly in making dyestuffs and a commanding lead in the business of making drugs and chemicals of all kinds. Today it has factories enough to supply the world with all it needs of those products. The use of the Haber process, greatly stimulated by the war, is also more firmly established in Germany than in any other country. So long as there is a possibility of war the Allied nations cannot permit their own chemical industries to be undersold and overshadowed by those of Germany, for to do it would make them relatively helpless in case of war.

Of course, chemistry cannot be outlawed. We cannot well do without the useful things that it gives us. The problem—and it is a difficult one—is how to outlaw the lethal products that it can create. It is not enough to enact that gases and poisons and high explosives shall not be used in war. We have learned, if we did not know before, that a nation engaged in a life-and-death struggle will not keep the agreements that it makes in time of peace or refrain from using an illegal weapon if it thinks that it can be made a means to victory. The League of Nations, intended to meet the issue, scarcely gives evidence of vitality enough to be of service in preventing war. The United States, where the hatred of war is as strong as it is anywhere, has refused to enter the League at all. Just how to solve the problem we do not know, but it will be a shameful thing if mankind does not find some way to solve it.

Westerners Favor Return to "Reconstructive Sanity"

In order to help themselves back to "reconstructive sanity," the farmers, merchants and bankers of Illinois have banded together, a strong progressive body.

The farmers—110,000 of them—have backed their chief spokesman, George A. Fox, treasurer of the State Agricultural Association, to:

First. Adopt a platform of economy and buy not what they want, but what they need.

Second. Work out a plan of collective buying and selling.

Third. Broaden their marketing facilities.

Fourth. Take steps to control their surplus and thereby prevent oversupply.

The bankers headed by William C. White, president of the State Banking Association, have expressed their willingness to co-operate to this extent:

By assisting the farmers with loans on necessities.

By giving reasonable time on payments.

By swinging their support to the local community instead of centering on business removed from the State.

The manufacturers whose attitude is reflected by their representative, Professor Perry Greeley Holden, director in the agricultural extension department of the International Harvester Company, have gone on record to:

First. Emphasize to the bankers just how important the farmer is to general business prosperity.

Second. To be patient in demanding payment on loans made for farm implements.

Third. Extend educational help along the lines of business economy and efficiency.

PHYSCHOLOGY TO BREAK UP BAD HABITS

Expert Gives Four Rules for Training of Children

Mothers are often heard to say, "My children have such untidy habits, and I don't seem to be able to break them. I talk all day long, but it doesn't do any good."

No mother needs to endure her children's untidy habits, or any other undesirable habits, if she goes about training them in the right way, and is willing to take a little trouble to carry it out. Four simple rules based on psychology, may serve to give such mothers an insight into the means of forming right habits. If carried out faithfully, these rules cannot fail to produce results.

First, decide for yourself what habit you wish to form. Then start enthusiastically and determinedly to break the old and launch the new one. Say to your children, "Beginning today, we are all going to hang up our wraps, and put our books and rubbers in the proper places when we come home from school. Let's see who remembers every time, and doesn't have to have mother tell her once about it." Arouse as much enthusiasm as you can about the matter. Be careful that you do not start to break and form anew too many habits at one time. Select one or two habits to work on, and keep at them persistently until you are reasonably sure that they are well fixed. Then start on another.

Second, permit no exceptions to occur after you have once started. No matter how good the intentions of the children are, they will lapse into the old ways after a few days. That is when you will have to work. You will find that eternal vigilance on your part will be the price of your children's good habits. When Mary comes home in a hurry to get out to play, she will throw her books on the nearest chair. Don't say, "Oh, well, she is little, and it is hard to remember all the time." That is where you will fail. Even though Mary has already gone away to play, she should be called back immediately and told in a kind manner, "You forgot your books today. Put them away, and then you may go to play." One or two experiences of that kind will soon make Mary more careful.

Third, repeat the desirable action as often as possible. We all know that the habit is most firmly fixed which we have been practicing longest. Seize every occasion to perform the act which you wish to become a habit, and its acquisition will come all the sooner.

Last of all, act, don't talk. Don't preach too much or abound in good talk in the abstract. When Mary throws her coat on the floor and her rubbers in the middle of the hall, don't tell her that nice little girls don't do those things, or that she is a careless girl and should know better, and a great deal more to that effect. Simply call her as soon as you discover what she has done, and tell her quietly and good-naturedly to put her things away immediately and then see that she does it. Such treatment as this is far more effective than mere talking.

Very Capable

A sea captain, holding a glass of lime-juice approvingly up to the light, said: "Navies are different today from what they used to be. A man was talking to an old sailor. The sailor said: "'Yes, sir, my boss was in the navy, too.' " "In the navy, was he?" said the man. "What was his official capacity, may I ask?" "Four to five quarts, sir," said the old sailor."—Washington Star.

$83,000,000; No Claimant

Uncle Sam has $83,000,000 of some people's money waiting in the Treasury for them to come and get it, according to the latest official figures of outstanding temporary Liberty bonds. This sum represents the interest due holders of temporary Liberty bonds who have not exchanged their bonds for permanent coupon bearing securities on which the regular interest is paid. The figures show that here are 7,471,171 separate temporary bonds of various denominations, amounting to $1,132,730,200, still in the hands of owners who have not exchanged them for coupon bonds. Against these figures on the Treasurer's books stands $83,165,867 interest money that bond owners have not yet claimed.—National Republican.

Feminine Accounting

"My wife made out an itemized expense account for last month," said Mr. Dubwaite. "Could you learn from her statement just what she bought?" "No. Most of her purchases were listed as 'Etc.'"—Birmingham Age-Herald.
